The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to withdraw it. A quorum is supposed to be present, this session being on a new legislative day. The regular order would be the count by tellers, and the point of no quorum could be made thereupon if a quorum failed to appear; but, pending that, the gentleman from California asks consent to amend the bill as he has indicated.

Mr. JONES. As I understand the effect of the amendment, it is to exclude the applicant from the benefit of any pension for the past, but would not exclude him from drawing a pension hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 after the word "service" insert: "Provided, That no pay or emoluments shall accrue by reason of this act or pension paid to this date."

Mr. LOUD. That is the exact language of the amendment the gentleman made to the other bill.

Mr. JONES. I understand that perfectly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to substituting this amendment for the amendment already agreed to by the committee?

Mr. LOUD. I do not know what position the gentleman proposes to occupy towards the bill, so I withdraw the amendment until after a vote can be taken, and then, if necessary, shall ask consent to offer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. LOUD. I am satisfied with the bill in the shape that it is in now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not advised who the tellers were.

Mr. EVERETT. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] were tellers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did not the gentleman from South Carolina withdraw the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. It was not necessary, because this is a subsequent meeting of the committee, and a quorum is supposed to be present. But a count has been ordered by tellers. It does not follow, however, that the point of no quorum is to be raised.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When there is no point of a quorum pending, is it necessary to have tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all; but tellers have been heretofore ordered by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent that the order for tellers be vacated.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The committee proceeded to vote.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was up before the committee heretofore——

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. The vote is being taken——

Mr. LOUD. I hope the gentleman will let me look after this bill myself.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I shall insist upon the regular order. I am a member of this House and the committee, I wish the gentleman to understand.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no vote being taken.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair had submitted the motion, and the ayes had voted. Now the status of the bill is to take the vote in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted the request of the gentleman from Missouri to vacate the vote by tellers, and the Chair was just submitting the question when the gentleman from Virginia rose for some purpose.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair put the question, and the yeas voted. I ask if that is not the status of the case?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that any vote was taken.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the Chair hold that this bill is now open for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair does not so hold. Debate is closed on this bill. The order was simply to vacate the vote by tellers.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. JONES. I rise for the purpose of making two or three remarks upon the status of this bill. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that when I called for the reading of this report, I did not remember the facts which applied to this particular case, and I merely wanted to refresh my memory. I want to say now that since this report has been read, I do not agree at all with the chairman from California [Mr. LOUD] that this bill is equally meritorious with that which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. COGSWELL] was the author of, and I remember distinctly that on previous occasions I have opposed this bill, and I have given my reasons for my opposition.

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. This bill is not open for debate, and I demand the regular order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order, and I hope the Chair will enforce the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to enforce the rules of the House, and the gentleman from South Dakota will conform to the rules.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair is lamentably failing to do so at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to submit his decision to the judgment of the committee, as against that of the gentleman from South Dakota. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES. I am not debating the merits of the bill, Mr. Chairman, but I asked for the parliamentary status of the bill, and it was upon that question I wished to be heard for a moment.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. JONES. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it was not my intention to raise the point of no quorum on this bill, but if I am not allowed to state my position, I will do so. The bill can not be forced through in this style.

Mr. PICKLER. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. As many as favor laying aside the bill with a favorable report will say aye.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 2.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be withdrawn without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks, pending the point of no quorum, that the bill be withdrawn without prejudice.

Mr. LOUD. I object. I have so stated, repeatedly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask permission to make a statement of one minute's length.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MAR-

TIN] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to say that I was to-day directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask this Committee of the Whole House to-night for unanimous consent to go to the consideration of bills which had never yet been considered, there being a number of very meritorious bills upon the Calendar. I thought that this matter now pending had been arranged between the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT].

Now, in view of what I have been directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to do, I beg that the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] will not insist upon his objection, but that he will allow the Chair again to put my request on behalf of the committee for unanimous consent that we go to the consideration of bills which have never yet been considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again put the request, in the absence of objection——

Mr. LOUD. It is perfectly unnecessary to submit the request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California objects. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order at this time, pending a count. The tellers will take their places.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Pending the count—

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia be allowed five minutes to make a personal statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the count, the gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia be allowed five minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I want to know if the gentleman from Virginia will then withdraw his point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the request of the gentleman from California, that the gentleman from Virginia be allowed to speak five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The count will proceed.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman knows now whether he will withdraw his point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

After further time spent in the count:

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I will renew my request.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending the count by tellers, I ask unanimous consent that the point of no quorum be withdrawn and that the gentleman from Virginia be allowed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, it is not my desire to discuss the merits of this bill. On a former occasion I gave the reasons which actuated me in opposing the passage of this measure. I want to say, moreover, that whilst I have opposed the passage of this bill, I have never yet raised the point of no quorum against it; and it was not my purpose to-night to raise that question. But whilst I frankly make that statement, I desire to make the further statement that I can not support this particular measure; because I do not believe that the evidence which accompanies the report is sufficient to justify Congress in removing the charge of desertion resting against this man.

Now, my friend from California has argued that I should withdraw my objection to this bill because I did not insist upon an objection to a bill which was considered here for a similar purpose on a former occasion to the extent of raising the question of a quorum. Mr. Chairman, I consider each one of these bills upon its individual merits. If I do not carry my objection in all cases to the extent of raising the quorum question is because there are, in my estimation, degrees of demerit—some are worse than others.

I beg to differ with the gentleman from California in one respect. I do not think this bill of his is supported by the same character of testimony that was adduced in the case to which reference has been made; and therefore I can not support this bill. I expect to vote against it; I expect to do all I can to defeat it; but I have said to the gentleman, and that was my intention when I came here, that I would not raise the question of no quorum. I want, however, to enter my solemn protest against the passage of bills of this kind. I do not think the charge of desertion resting against any man ought to be removed upon the testimony of the man alone.

I think in addition to his testimony there ought to be adduced testimony to support that which he gives himself justifying the removal of the charge of desertion. I want to emphasize the fact that because I do not insist upon a quorum in this particular case, I do not relinquish the right to do so hereafter in cases of a similar character, but worse in degree. This shall be no precedent for my future action, and I hope it will not be cited as such.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside, with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment that I offered be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from California will be agreed to, by unanimous consent, in lieu of the amendment reported by the committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we begin with Calendar No. 342, a bill which has heretofore been considered, and to which objections have heretofore been made and which are now withdrawn, the bill H. R. 4290.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to begin the business for the evening session with Calendar No. 342. Is there objection?

Mr. McRAE. Where would we be if that were not done?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. You would have to go back to the first.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask what the object of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is in that?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will very cheerfully state again what the object was. I was asked to-day by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask unanimous consent to-night that the Committee of the Whole should proceed to the consideration to-night of bills only which have not heretofore been considered and to which objections have been made.

As to the bill which has just been passed, the gentleman has seen that that has been adjusted and the objection withdrawn. As to the bill that I am speaking about now, it is one that was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST], and I understand that the objection to it is withdrawn. Therefore, I ask that we proceed to consider that bill.

Mr. HULL. The trouble about that is that if we let all the bills be considered that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] is willing to have considered, we shall have still fewer members left to fight for those that the gentleman from Virginia does not approve of.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The gentlemen from Iowa is no more anxious than I am, after the months of labor that I have given to this matter, for the passage of all these bills, and what I ask now is not for the purpose of injuring the feelings or invading the rights of anybody, but only for the purpose of trying to get some of these bills through, many of which are so meritorious that no man will object.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will modify his request so as simply to ask that that bill be considered next, I will not object.

Mr. POST. I will make that request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to object to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST] now asks unanimous consent that House bill 4292 be next considered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill.

DRUZILLA J. RIGG.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill., who is the daughter and only heir of James Depoy (who was second lieutenant in Company A in the Fifty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry in the war of the rebellion, to whom pension certificate No. 158723 was issued, and who died previous to the receipt by him of said certificate), the amount due upon said certificate at the time of the death of said James Depoy.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case was read when the bill was up before, and there is no occasion to read it again. I simply want to say that the objection arose—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. JONES. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will be allowed to make his statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be permitted, without objection, to make a brief explanation.

Mr. POST. I simply want to say that this bill was before the House at a meeting two weeks ago, and objection was made to it by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] until he could examine certain matters in the Pension Office. He has examined those matters, and I understand now that he is not inclined to make any objection to the bill. I therefore ask for a vote.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I ask unanimous consent that the committee now proceed to the consideration of bills on the Calendar of which we have jurisdiction, and which have not been heretofore considered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [A pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN], who is familiar with the Calendar, will please indicate the first bill for consideration under the order just made.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It is House bill No. 6650, Calendar No. 382.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HULL. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions whether Calendar No. 375 has been considered? I do not know that anybody here wants it considered; I do not; but I think it comes first on the Calendar among the bills not heretofore considered.

Mr. STRONG. I want it considered.

Mr. HULL. Then you have a right to have it considered. The Military Committee has the same rights as the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that bill never has been considered, and it comes before the other on the Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I believe I am in error, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from Iowa is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill indicated by the gentleman from Iowa.

ALEXANDER P. MAGAAN.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the military record of Alexander P. Magaan, who enlisted as a private in Battery H, Fourth United States Artillery, on the 8th day of July, 1846, and stands charged with having deserted on the 8th day of September, 1848, to be corrected by removing said charge of desertion and granting an honorable discharge to said soldier, it appearing that he did not desert, but was absent with leave.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs was read as follows:

Add at the end of line 12:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or emoluments shall become due by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report in that case be read.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope there will be no objection to the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for to-night.

Mr. STRONG. For what reason?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ARNOLD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SAMUEL BURNS.

The next pension business upon the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Burns.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Samuel Burns, late a soldier in the Florida Volunteers in the Florida Indian war, and allow him a pension rated at $12 per month.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions striking out the word "twelve" before "dollars" and inserting "eight," was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MOSES) was read as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Burns, have considered the same and report as follows:

The records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that the claimant served from July 30, 1836, to August 16, 1836, as a private in Capt. John M. G. Hunter's company, Florida Volunteers, in the Florida Indian war.

Mr. Burns is now about 85 years old, and too feeble to do anything toward earning a support. He has an aged wife and several unmarried daughters dependent upon him for maintenance, and he has but little property or income.

The passage of the bill is recommended with an amendment striking out the word "twelve" in line 7 and inserting in lieu thereof the word "eight," so as to allow a pension rated at $8 per month.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ADALINE J. PROPS.

The next pension business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6228) granting a pension to Adaline J. Props.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Adaline J. Props, widow of Lewis C. Props, a soldier in the Southern or Sabine war of 1836, and allow her a pension rated at $15 per month.

An amendment recommended by the committee, striking out "fifteen" before the word "dollars" and inserting "eight," was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon laying this bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report in that case read.

The report (by Mr. STALLINGS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6228) granting a pension to Adaline J. Props, have considered the same and report as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Lewis C. Props, who was enrolled August 3, 1836, in Capt. Moore's company, Arkansas Volunteers, Sabine Indian war, and was mustered out January 21, 1837.

The Sabine Indian war was, like the Creek, Cherokee, and Seminole wars, conducted under the authority of the United States, but through oversight the Sabine war was not included in the provisions of the Indian war act of July 27, 1892, and as a consequence Mrs. Props's claim at the Pension Bureau was rejected.

The service in this case is a matter of record and has been recognized by the allowance of bounty land warrants under the acts of 1852 and 1855.

Mrs. Props is now over 72 years old, very feeble, and in needy and destitute circumstances. Her husband, the soldier, died February 22, 1890, and since then she has lived alone. She married the soldier in 1838.

The facts are fully shown by the testimony filed at the Pension Bureau and by a numerously signed affidavit and petition accompanying the bill.

In view of the foregoing facts, your committee believe that this claimant should be put upon the same footing with other Indian war widows, and the passage of the bill is therefore recommended with an amendment striking out the word "fifteen" in line 7, and substituting in lieu thereof the word "eight;" so as to allow a pension of $8 per month.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation of the bill from the author of it, or the gentleman who has it in charge.

Mr. McRAE. This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. TERRY], who is not present this evening. The report just read sets forth very clearly, I think, sufficient facts to support the bill. There is no question about the service, and no question about the needy condition of the widow. The only question is whether we should grant this pension for service rendered in the Sabine war, which was not covered by the bill passed two years ago providing pensions for services in the Indian wars. It is perfectly clear that this soldier rendered service for the time required by that act. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. JONES. In what command was this soldier?

Mr. McRAE. The report states that.

Mr. JONES. How many troops were mustered into that service?

Mr. McRAE. Enough to suppress the disturbance.

Mr. JONES. I wish to know how large the class may be to which this man belongs?

Mr. McRAE. It is not very large.

Mr. JONES. If there are these people who are entitled to the same consideration as others who were engaged in suppressing Indian difficulties, I want to know why there has not been some general legislation on the subject?

Mr. McRAE. I presume because they were overlooked or did not have friends enough to get it through. There can not be a great many of these old people. The service was rendered a long time ago—sixty-eight years.

Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman has no idea how many widows there are in the same situation as this one?

Mr. McRAE. There can not be a great many; but I have no definite information upon that point.

Mr. JONES. It does not seem to me an equitable thing to single out one widow who happens to have a Representative on this floor and pass a private bill for her benefit, while we leave all other persons of the class to which she belongs unprovided for.

Mr. McRAE. If the others of the class have not friends enough to look after their interests here, I see no reason why we should not do justice to those gallant soldiers or their widows whose claims are presented and whose needs are pressing.

Mr. JONES. It simply seems to be making a distinction where one ought not to be made.

Mr. McRAE. But we do such things every time we pass a special bill. I will state that I know there is one case of this kind from my district.

Mr. NEILL. I have one case also in my district. I introduced a bill to provide for that case; but the affidavits not being ready it has not yet been acted upon.

Mr. McRAE. There is no question about the service having been rendered in this case, as I understand.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman know that this service was rendered? The reports are read so rapidly I can not always catch the purport of the statements.

Mr. McRAE. Service was rendered sufficient to satisfy the committee. I am satisfied it is a good case. The bill proposes to pension this widow at only $8 a month, which is less, I believe, than other widows generally receive.

Mr. HULL. I am very glad to find that there was one Indian war which was so very small and unimportant that Congress in raking over the subject could not find out anything about it. No doubt this bill ought to pass from a Democratic standpoint. But I would like it to appear in the RECORD, for my own information at least, how many days this soldier served. I have an idea it was about twenty days. If there was service of twenty days this widow ought certainly to be pensioned to preserve the record of this Congress, although we have repeatedly tried to get pensions for old soldiers who served three years or more during the late war, and were all shot to pieces, and yet we have failed. I think that whenever any bill so meritorious as this comes up, with twenty days' service back of it, it ought to pass without objection from the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman will permit me, I have the report here, which shows that this man volunteered and was enrolled August 3, 1836, in Capt. Moore's company, and was mustered out January 1, 1837.

Mr. HULL. Of course from August 3 to January 1 is a pretty long term of service!

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection be made, the bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

There was no objection.

WILLIS MANASCO.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5589) to pension Willis Manasco.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Willis Manasco, of Eldridge, Howard County, Ark., who served in Captain Philpot's company of Alabama Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The amendments reported by the committee were read as follows:

In the seventh line strike out "Mexican" and insert "Creek Indian," and in the eighth line strike out "twelve" and insert "eight."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I should like to hear the report read in this case.

The report (by Mr. LUCAS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5589) granting a pension to Willis Manasco, have considered the same and respectfully report as follows:

The records of the Second Auditor's Office, Treasury Department, show that Willis Manasco is borne on the roll of Capt. Benjamin A. Philpot's company of Alabama Volunteers as having been paid for nineteen days' traveling from Somerville, Ala., to Vernon, Ala., and from Vernon to Somerville, when ordered home, a distance each way (according to the records) of 190 miles. This was in the Creek Indian war of 1836.

In a declaration for pension, filed December 4, 1891, Mr. Manasco declares that while in said service he received an injury to his left thigh by his horse (which had been shot) falling upon him, and that he has been crippled ever since.

The records, which are obviously incomplete so far as these old wars are concerned, fail to show the injury, and as the service shown is insufficient in duration to warrant allowance of pension under the general Indian war act of July 27, 1892, the claim filed at the Pension Bureau has been rejected.

Mr. Manasco resides at Eldridge, Howard County, Ark., and Messrs. Robert G. Luttrell, J. B. Luttrell, and J. E. Pannell, citizens of that county and State, testify that the claimant is 77 years old, in feeble health, and unable to perform manual labor; also that he has no income except that derived from a small farm of 15 or 16 acres, and this does not amount to more than $60 per year, which is insufficient to support him and his wife.

After careful consideration of all the facts, your committee recommend the passage of the act with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "Mexican" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the words "Creek Indian;" strike out the word "twelve" in line 7 and substitute in lieu thereof the word "eight;" so as to allow a rating of $8 per month.

Mr. JONES. I hope there will be some statement made in regard to this bill. As I understand, the only evidence that this man served at all is the fact that he drew mileage for about nineteen days.

Mr. PICKLER. Nineteen days is a good long service for those soldiers!

Mr. JONES. I do not agree with the gentleman. I do not think a man who served only nineteen days ought to be pensioned unless he received serious injury or incurred some disability from which he is now suffering.

Mr. McRAE. I know this old gentleman well. The records of the War Department show that he was regularly enrolled, that he remained in the service as long as there was any necessity for him to do so, and that he received payment for nineteen days. The evidence, while not sufficient to satisfy the Pension Department, is convincing to me that this old man received in that service the injury of which he now complains, and that he deserves aid.

He did all that was demanded of him to prove his courage as a soldier, by enlisting and performing the duties required as long as necessary to suppress the outbreak. He is now very old, about 78 years of age. He is as honest and as honorable an old gentleman as ever made a track. He still loves the country he fought for, and he now has need for this little pension.

I believe this Congress can not do a more creditable thing in the way of a private pension, and I do not believe it has ever before granted a more deserving service pension than is proposed by this bill for this honest, feeble old man.

I hope there will be no objection to it. I have attended these meetings almost every night for six months trying to help this good old friend, Willis Manasco. I want him to feel in his old age that he has been treated as his other comrades of Capt. Philpott's regiment, a regiment that is known to all old Alabamians, because it made a record that did them much credit for successful Indian fighting. I hope my friend from Virginia will make no further objection to this bill.

Mr. JONES. I understand from the report that the evidence submitted in this case was not sufficient to convince the Pension Department that this man actually received the disability which is spoken of in the report as the result of a fall from his horse.

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; it was not deemed sufficient in the Pension Office.

Mr. JONES. But the gentleman from Arkansas states that the evidence was sufficient to convince him. I would like to ask him where that evidence is and what it is? I think the committee ought to have the benefit of that information, since they are called upon to pass upon this bill.

Mr. McRAE. I will state to the gentleman that the only evidence required by me, knowing this man as I do, and having his character supported by his neighbors, in whom I have unbounded confidence, is his own statement as to the disability. I do not believe that for ten times this amount Willis Manasco would state a falsehood to procure a pension. He has lived for many years in the little home in the neighborhood where he is well known, and no man who knows him would undertake to charge that he would state anything that was not absolutely and unqualifiedly true in every respect.

Mr. JONES. I only wanted the House to fully understand the statements which have been made in the report as supplemented by the gentleman from Arkansas, in order that we may be able to act intelligibly.

Mr. McRAE. Why, this pension, my dear sir, is not granted for the injury; it is granted for the service. I do not ask the House to take his statement as to the injury and grant the pension upon that alone. But I do claim for him a service pension on the ground that he was a brave soldier in an Indian war who did actual service. The pension could have been granted under the general law, but it appears that the time of service was short a few days. The report states that the record of this war is incomplete in many respects. It is difficult, of course, at this late date to procure the testimony; but there is no question in my mind about his statement as to the injury being true, nor that he served more than nineteen days for which he was paid.

Mr. PICKLER. The record shows that he was in the service?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; there is no question about that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that this claim is not based on the ground of the disability which this man is alleged to have received, for I for one do not think a man ought to be pensioned who served in these wars only nineteen days, and received no injury of any kind by reason of that short service. The evidence on which this claim is based is unsatisfactory and incomplete, it being simply to the effect that the soldier having been paid for traveling a certain number of days the inference is that he served those days.

Now, if we are to begin to pension men for nineteen days' service, then there is no reason why we should not pension them for fifteen days' service, and if we fix on fifteen days' service the demand will come after awhile to pension for twelve days' service, and when that is reached it will be insisted that nine days' service ought to be sufficient, and if nine days' service is sufficient then there is no reason why one day's service should not be ample. We have got to draw the line somewhere. The general law is exceedingly liberal when it fixes the period at thirty days.

I know that there have been special bills put through the House to have people who served twenty-nine days and so many hours, or something of that sort pensioned, but I do not think where there is such a discrepancy as this, only nineteen days' service, if that much, we ought to pass the bill and establish such a bad precedent. If we pass this bill somebody will get up, perhaps before this evening is closed, and say, "I have a bill where a man served fifteen days. Now, you have already granted a pension to a man who served nineteen days, and you should not make fish of one and flesh of the other. You should treat all alike." That precedent will be held up to us, and the claim made that we ought not to discriminate against a man on account of a difference of only four days' service.

Mr. McRAE. But I hope my friend will remember that while the record shows that he was only paid for nineteen days, he was paid when he was 190 miles from home, and I assume that they came to the conclusion that 190 miles travel to get home would take the balance of the time that is required to earn a service pension under the Indian war act.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. He had to walk home, I imagine. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ARNOLD in the chair). In the absence of objection, the bill as amended will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

JOHN MAHOLM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2920) for the relief of John Maholm.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Maholm, dependent father of George Maholm, late of Company B, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment:

Add after the word "volunteers," in line 7, the words "in the war of the rebellion," and amend the title so as to read: "A bill to pension John Maholm, dependent father."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move as a substitute for the committee amendment that the words "in the late civil war" be inserted where the words "in the war of the rebellion" occur.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were—ayes 3, noes 20.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be read.

The report (by Mr. MARTIN of Indiana) was read, as follows:

Your Committee on Invalid Pensions, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2929) to grant a pension to John Maholm, as dependent father of George H. Maholm, deceased, find the facts as follows, to wit:

George H. Maholm, the deceased, was the son of John and Margaret Maholm, of Shelbyville, Ind., and enlisted as a private in Company B, Seventieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, on August 1, 1862, and was duly mustered in. The records of the War Department, as reported to the Pension Office, show the foregoing, and also that he was wounded and sent to the hospital May 14, 1864; present with his command September and October, 1864; muster-out roll of the company dated June 8, 1865, reports him, George H. Maholm, killed by cars November 6, 1864, at Chattahoochee River, Georgia. The soldier's mother filed an application for pension as a dependent parent on March 15, 1869, which was rejected February 1, 1871, on the ground that the soldier's death "did not occur in the line of duty." The mother of the soldier died March 30, 1871. The soldier's parents were married January 29, 1839. The soldier left no widow or children.

After the mother's death the father applied for pension as dependent parent, but this application was rejected March 30, 1883, on identical grounds on which the mother's claim was rejected. It is established that the soldier for five years prior to his death had actually contributed to the support of his parents; that the latter were poor, depending on their labor for support; that the mother had become physically disabled by a rupture of the navel in childbirth; that the father was partially disabled from labor by reason of a gunshot wound in one of his hands, destroying and carrying away a portion of the scaphoid bone. The father is now about 73 years of age.

The circumstances of the soldier's death are as follows:

The Adjutant-General reports the soldier killed November 6, 1864.

The Surgeon-General reports the soldier killed by a railroad engine November 6, 1864.

J. A. Fitzgerald, assistant surgeon Seventieth Indiana, states that the soldier is supposed to have been intoxicated at the time. As to this supposition, it is utterly unfounded and is contradicted by the evidence following:

John C. Newton, late captain of Company B, Seventieth Indiana Volunteers, testifies that the soldier, while in the service and line of duty, near Atlanta, Ga., on or about November 6, 1864, was accidentally run over by the cars and killed. Nothing definite is known as to how the accident occurred, as none of the company were with him at the time. He was found dead in the morning by his comrades near the camp of the regiment.

Comrades Thompson and Whitcomb testify that the soldier was accidentally killed near Atlanta, Ga., under the following circumstances, viz: That said Whitcomb, as sergeant, with a squad of men had leave to visit the One hundred and fifth Illinois Volunteers, another regiment of their brigade, the said Maholm being one of the squad; that they had to cross the Chattahoochee River, in order to return to their camp, on the railroad bridge; that it being quite dark when they started to return, the said Maholm decided that he would not attempt to cross the bridge, which was dangerous, and would return to the camp they had left, that of the One hundred and fifth Illinois, and wait until morning; that he left the squad and started on his return along the track of the railroad, which ran through some deep cuts and was quite crooked, and this was the last time anyone saw him alive; that the said Maholm was found on the track the next morning, dead, near a sharp curve in the railroad; that the night was very dark and he was run over and killed by the cars while in the cut and before he could get out of the way; and that the soldier was a good soldier, and was temperate and of steady habits.

It further appears by the affidavits of Comrades Albright, Thompson, and Waggoner that the said Maholm, when he started on the visit to the other regiment, had just been relieved from picket duty, and that both of said regiments lay inside the picket line. Said Waggoner says he was a messmate of said Maholm; that the latter was a brave, good soldier, never absent from roll call, always ready for duty, and that the witness was with said Maholm when he made said visit.

Upon the foregoing facts, the Committee on Invalid Pensions feel that the ruling of the Pension Department that the said Maholm's death was not in the line of duty is harsh, if not wholly erroneous, and therefore recommend the passage of said bill, amended, however, by adding the words "in the war of the rebellion," and changing the title to read, "A bill to pension John Maholm, dependent father."

Mr. JONES. I should like to have some statement about that bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the facts appear so fully in the report that I can not add anything to what is there stated, and yet I know in the confusion it may not have been heard by all.

This soldier was an unmarried man, the son of these parents, and he enlisted on the 1st day of August, 1862. He served faithfully and well, was wounded in battle, was never reported absent without leave, and on the 5th or 6th of November, 1864, two years and three months after his enlistment, he, with some of his comrades who had just come off guard duty, went, with the leave of the commanding officer, to visit some friends in the One hundred and fifth Illinois, all lying within the same picket line. When they started to return they had to cross a high railroad bridge across the Chattahoochee River. They were approaching that bridge upon a railroad track which ran through deep cuts, and was very crooked.

When they came to that bridge he was afraid to trust himself upon it in the night, for fear he would fall through, and concluded he would return to the camp of the One hundred and fifth Illinois, just a short distance away. He left his comrades and started back. That was the last that was ever seen of him alive. He was run over and killed by the cars.

Mr. JONES. How about the circumstances of the beneficiary of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The beneficiary of the bill is the father. The soldier never was married, and so left neither widow or children. His mother applied for a pension, and it was rejected in 1871, upon the ground that he did not die in the line of duty. There is no pretense that he deserted, no pretense that he was away without leave, but simply that he was not in the line of duty when killed, and if he had had a widow, and she had applied under the act of June 27, 1890, she could not have received a pension, because he had no honorable discharge, and because it would have been held that he did not die in the line of duty.

He served two years and three months. His mother is dead. His father is 78 years old, poor, helpless, and crippled. He has not many years to live, and this is simply to give him the benefit that he would receive if the Pension Department had held, as I really think they ought to have held, that this soldier had been killed in the line of duty.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MRS. E. S. LUKE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2906) for the relief of Mrs. E. S. Luke, widow of John L. Luke, late a soldier in the Black Hawk war.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. E. S. Luke, of Clarksville, Pike County, Mo., widow of John L. Luke, who served as a soldier in the Black Hawk war, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let the report be read, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. CLARK of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2906) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. Luke, have considered the same and report:

The records of the War Department show that the claimant's late husband, John L. Luke, was enrolled May 19, 1832, in Capt. Enoch Duncan's company of mounted riflemen, Illinois Volunteers, Black Hawk war, and was honorably discharged June 25, 1832.

Mr. Luke had previously served as a midshipman in the naval service of the United States, and his commission as such, dated March 4, 1819, and signed by President James Monroe, is on file with the papers in the case.

It appears from the claimant's statements that she is now about 82 years old, without property of any kind, and solely dependent upon friends and relatives for support and maintenance. She resides at Clarksville, Pike County, Mo.

John O. Roberts and John M. Clifford, residents of Clarksville, Mo., and acquaintances of the claimant and her husband for many years, fully corroborate her statements as to dependence, and add that John L. Luke died in 1869.

The passage of the bill is respectfully recommended.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope that some gentleman will explain this bill. The reports are read so rapidly that I find it difficult to take in just what they contain.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the explanation of this is very short. The report states when this man enlisted in the Black Hawk war, and when he was mustered out. He served a longer time than the law requires to get an $8 pension, or a $12 pension, in the present condition of his widow. He also served as a midshipman in the United States Navy during President Monroe's administration, and while the records of the Navy Department fail to show the length of time that he served as midshipman, he always claimed that he served over three years.

This bill was introduced into Congress by my predecessor two years ago, and the lady was then 82 years old. That makes her 84 now; and if the pension is not granted now, it might as well never be granted at all.

Mr. JONES. Was this bill ever reported favorably by the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has been reported favorably, not by the Invalid Pensions Committee, but by the Committee on Pensions, of which I am a member. It was reported favorably in the last Congress, and I believe it passed the Senate in that Congress.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LOUISA C. CONWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4935) granting a pension to Louisa C. Conwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $12 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa C. Conwell, of Burlingame, Osage County, Kans., mother of the late James M. Conwell, late of Company E, Eleventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

Mr. JONES. I hope the report will be read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4935) granting a pension to Louisa C. Conwell, submit the following report:

Louisa C. Conwell is the mother of James M. Conwell, who was a member of Company E, Eleventh Kansas Cavalry. She filed a claim for pension, No. 564207, which was rejected on the ground that the soldier left a widow, Belle Conwell, who had received a widow's pension. The widow remarried August 6, 1892, thereby forfeiting her pension.

The soldier served from August 19, 1862, to August 7, 1865. The soldier was a pensioner and died December 7, 1891, of disease contracted in the service. The mother is 70 years old, poor and dependent. Although the marriage of the son destroyed the pensionable status of the mother, the remarriage of the widow has relieved the Government of all legal liability under existing laws on account of the service and death of the said soldier.

Your committee think that the helpless and needy mother of a soldier who served honorably for three years in the late war ought not under these circumstances to be denied the assistance of the Government in her old age.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be a very full explanation of this bill. I understand from a hasty reading of the report that inasmuch as the widow of this soldier can not receive a pension because——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ARNOLD). The gentleman from Virginia will suspend a moment. There is a minority report. The Clerk will read that, and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The views of the minority were read, as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The minority of the committee submit the following statement bearing on the bill (H. R. 4935) granting a pension to Louisa C. Conwell. In this case the soldier served from August, 1862, to August, 1865, with no record of any sickness. He drew a pension at $4, $8, and finally $12 on account of rheumatism and resulting disease of heart, and died December 7, 1891. His widow drew pension from that date until August 1, 1892 (eight months), when she remarried. This bill proposes to pension now the soldier's mother at $12 per month for life.

Under the provisions of the general law no mother of a soldier who left a widow or child can be pensioned, no matter whether such widow subsequently remarry or die or not. This is a wise inhibition of the general law and applies to all alike. There are hundreds, and no doubt thousands, of persons in just exactly the same position as this petitioner, most of whom will never think of seeking such exceptional and extraordinary favors as this bill proposes to give to this individual.

Twenty-six years after the close of his army service the soldier dies, and his widow draws pension as long as she sees fit, and now it is proposed to pay this pension to another relative of the soldier. The case does not present one single exceptional or meritorious feature. If the inhibition of the general law is wrong it should be replaced and pensions given to all mothers alike when the widow remarries or dies, and this by general enactment to include the modest and the humble who never heard of pension by private act, as well as those who have been able to secure the active aid of some member of Congress or other influential friend.

The passage of such a bill as this would be personal favoritism, pure and simple, justifiable on no ground of equity and justice. There are precedents for it, no doubt; the private acts of the last four or five Congresses present precedents for every conceivable form of personal favor and individual benefaction, but which are not binding, and should have no weight with one who strives to do justly by all men.

The undersigned respectfully urge that this bill do lie on the table.

JOHN J. McDANNOLD.
M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have read in my time the affidavit which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF KANSAS, Shawnee County:

Louisa C. Conwell, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says: I am in my seventy-third year of age. During the life of my son, James M. Conwell, he was my sole support, and I was entirely dependent both before he was granted his pension and after he received it. Upon the receipt of his pension he divided it with me, giving me the greater share. He supported me the same after his marriage as before.

LOUISA C. CONWELL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of June, 1894.

[SEAL.] SAMUEL BARNES, Notary Public.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I was personally acquainted with the soldier in his lifetime and am acquainted with the family. This old lady is 73 years of age, and, as she says, after the soldier returned from the war he supported her until he married his wife. I think that was in 1886. After he married his wife he continued to support his mother, and supported her until his death. After he died, and he died December 7, 1891, of disease contracted in the service, his widow drew a pension until August, 1892, when she remarried. The soldier served three years, and died from the results of disease contracted in the service, and drew a pension under the old law.

Now, there can be no hardship in pensioning this mother. Had the soldier never married she would have been entitled to a pension. The soldier did marry; but after his death the widow remarried, thereby relieving the Government from the payment of a pension, and to-day the Government is paying nothing. Here is a mother supported by her son up to the time of his death. Now the widow that he left has remarried and the mother comes in here and asks for what? For simply that which this nation, that our people, have promised to the mother of every man who gave his life to save this nation.

I hope no gentleman will object to granting a pension to this poor old mother who gave her son to defend this nation. This is not a case where a mother is asking for something she is not entitled to. She, under the law of this land, could rely and did rely upon her son for support. So long as he lived she was not disappointed in that. He divided his pension with her. He supported her. And now, after his death, and after the remarriage of his widow, I have introduced this bill in behalf of this dependent mother, and ask that she be granted a pension of $12 a month.

Now, then, there is one objection urged in the minority report, and that is that it is intended to give a pension to this dependent mother for life. To overcome this objection I will agree to an amendment that if at any time the widow should be restored to the pension roll that then the pension allowed by this Congress to the mother shall cease. I hope there will be no objection to granting this pension to this poor old mother, who gladly permitted her son to go out in defense of this country, and who by reason of the soldier contracting disease in the service lost her support.

I ask that this nation keep its promise to the ex-Union soldiers, their widows and dependent relatives. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that it would be possible for me to add anything to the admirable views of the minority filed in this case. It seems to me that the very reading of that report should convince every gentleman upon this floor that this pension ought not to be granted.

Now, so far as I am personally concerned, I have nothing to say to the gentleman from Kansas on account of his statement, that he hopes there is nobody in this House so small as to oppose this pension. I am accustomed to hearing flings of that kind at gentlemen who dare to oppose bills that they believe possess no merit, and personally I am perfectly indifferent to them: but I wish to call attention to the fact that this report is signed by three gentlemen who are well known to the members of this body, and that the fling at those gentlemen was an exceedingly unkind and unjust one.

They have expressed their honest opinions in this report, and they have expressed them so forcibly that they must have convinced every fair-minded and just person on this floor that there is no merit in this bill. The gentleman from Kansas says, with a great deal of flourish and grandiloquence, that this soldier "gave his life to save the nation." The report of the minority states that the soldier did not die until twenty-six years after the close of the war, and that his death was not the result of his service in the Army, but resulted from rheumatism and from heart disease which was superinduced by rheumatism.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. He died from disease contracted in the service.

Mr. JONES. I will read from the minority report upon that subject. It shall speak for itself.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I say the fact is that he died from the effects of a disease contracted in the service.

Mr. JONES. He drew a pension first at $4, then at $8, and finally at $12 a month on account of rheumatism and resulting disease of the heart, and he died in December, 1891, and there is not a word in the report about his death resulting from his service in the Army or from which any such inference can be drawn.

On the contrary, the report states that he did not die until twenty-six years after the close of the war, and it makes this general and sweeping remark: "The case does not present one single exceptional or meritorious feature." That report is signed by JOHN J. MCDANNOLD, Mr. M. R. BALDWIN, a gallant Union soldier who bears upon his body honorable wounds received in battle, and C. J. ERDMAN. These gentlemen, all Northern men, over their own signatures, after a careful investigation of all the facts and all the testimony bearing on the case, deliberately inform this House that it does not possess a single exceptional or meritorious feature.

I ask gentlemen if in the face of that statement they are willing, in their eagerness and mad zeal to pension everybody, to put this woman on the pension rolls. It is not a question as to whether the widow of this soldier remarried or not. If the soldier left a widow or infant children, the mother under no circumstances was entitled to receive a pension, and the fact that the widow remarried, or that she did not remarry, would cut no figure whatever in the case.

The fact, however, is that the widow did draw a pension on account of the soldier's services, and that she did remarry and voluntarily relinquish that pension, and there is no more reason why this mother should now be placed on the pension roll than there is why the hundreds and thousands of other mothers of dead soldiers in this land should be placed upon the roll. Are we going to pension everybody who can exert sufficient influence to secure the introduction of a bill for his or her benefit, even in the face of such a report as is presented in this case by gentlemen who have investigated it fully and are so convinced of the injustice and the lack of merit of the claim that they are compelled to file an adverse report?

I know these gentlemen, as we all do, and I know that they examine these cases very thoroughly, and are so conscientious and so anxious to avoid the possibility of injustice that they always give the claimant the benefit of the doubt where there is any doubt, and never make an adverse report until they are convinced that the case is one which absolutely requires of them as honest legislators that they shall protest against it. I know that they permit many a bill to come before this House upon what appears to be a unanimous report of the committee when they do not believe the case to be clearly meritorious, but simply because they desire to give the claimant the benefit of every possible doubt.

Mr. BRYAN. Was this widow's son married or single?

Mr. JONES. He was a married man, and he died in 1891.

Mr. BRYAN. Is his widow drawing a pension?

Mr. JONES. His widow drew a pension on account of his service, but relinquished it by remarrying, and now his mother asks that she be put upon the pension roll for that reason, when the fact of the remarriage of the widow really has nothing to do with the case, because the general law says that if the soldier left a widow, or infant children, his father or mother can not in any case receive the pension. The remarriage of the widow has nothing to do with the case, and is not an element to be considered.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I should like to ask the gentleman what he thinks of the other twelve members of that committee, the majority of it?

Mr. JONES. I judge from the length of their report that they did not examine this case very carefully. At any rate, they have not given the House the benefit of any extended views about it, and I opine that as a matter of fact all of the other twelve members were not present when the case was considered. If there happened to be present on that occasion eight out of the fifteen members of the committee, they constituted a quorum, and five members could have reported the bill favorably, while three were opposed to it.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I will ask the gentleman another question. Is it not a fact that there is just as much merit in this case as in the case of any mother whose son had supported her after the war? I have had an affidavit on that point read here, so as to remove all question about it. That affidavit is clear and conclusive as to the fact that this soldier did continue to support his mother up to the time of his death. I know the parties. I knew the son in his lifetime, and I know that he did support his mother before he was married and after he was married up to the time he died. That is the fact as established by the evidence in the case.

Mr. JONES. Notwithstanding that fact, the general law, broad, liberal, and comprehensive as it is, says that in a case of this sort, if the son leaves a widow or infant children his parents have no claim upon the Government on account of his services. The bare leaving of a widow cuts out the parents.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. But if the general law were to control all these cases coming here, there would be no necessity for these Friday night sessions. Every bill passed here to-night has been passed because the general law did not give the relief which was proper and just.

Mr. JONES. But the reason we have passed these bills is that they were exceptional cases. That, at least, was the claim made by those on your side advocating them. The gentleman will not maintain that this is an exceptional case when the report states that there are thousands of parents standing upon precisely the same footing that this mother does. This is not an exceptional case. She belongs to a large class of those dependent relatives for whom the Government does not undertake to provide.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman says the cases we have passed here to-night have been exceptional. I would like to ask him whether four of them were not exceptional by reason of the short term of service in old Indian wars for which the pensions were granted.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that I protested against the passage of every one of those bills, and voted against them; and I will ask the gentleman whether or not he can say as much.

Mr. PICKLER. But the gentleman did not raise the point of no quorum. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, having presented the report in this case on behalf of the majority of the committee, I will occupy a few moments only by way of explanation. The committee regarded this case as exceptional in this: Here was an old mother, 73 years of age; the helpless and dependent mother of a soldier who was dead. And this old woman, by reason of the peculiarities of the law, was cut out of the benefits of pension. In that respect the case was exceptional. But the widow who had intervened between her and the right of pension had married again; so that there was nothing to justify Congress in refusing to come in and grant to this old woman the benefits she would have received if there never had been a widow.

It seems to the majority of the committee that in no class of cases is there so strong an appeal to the consideration of the nation as in the cases of the mothers of soldiers—the women who gave up their sons to go to the war and who were then left in their extreme old age dependent upon charity. We thought deserving women of this class ought not to be cut out of the right of pension, at least so long as there was nobody else intervening; and the widow being in this case out of the way, we thought the circumstances were such as to justify the passage of a special act.

Mr. JONES. I move that this bill be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] takes precedence.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. JONES there were on a division (called for by Mr JONES]—ayes 11, noes 27.

So the motion was rejected.

The question being then taken on the motion of Mr. CURTIS of Kansas that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, there were on a division (called for by Mr. JONES)—ayes 30, noes 8.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JONES and Mr. CURTIS of Kansas were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 6.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia make the point of no quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The committee then rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar having found itself without a quorum, the chairman had, in accordance with the rule, directed the roll to be called and now reported the names of the absentees to the House to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal.

Seventy-one members have answered to their names. Not a quorum.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CURTIS], who has been present this evening until a few moments ago, was obliged to leave on account of sickness. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, Mr. CURTIS of New York was excused.

And then, on motion of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana (at 9 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 28, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. W. E. PARSON, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BENJAMIN F. POTEET.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Benjamin F. Poteet.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty-eight;" in lines 6 and 7 strike out "not otherwise appropriated" and insert "to the credit of the Sac and Fox Indians."

Mr. SAYERS. Before consent is given I would like the gentleman to make an explanation of the amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. One amendment reduces the amount appropriated 7 cents, or from 76 cents to 68 cents. The other provides that, instead of appropriating the money out of the Treasury, it shall be taken from any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were considered and agreed to.

JAMES L. TOWNSEND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1468) for the relief of James L. Townsend.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent to consider that bill, a similar one having been reported from the House Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of James L. Townsend, late captain of Company B, Fourteenth Connecticut Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of said company and regiment.

Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House have reported a similar bill, which is on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The House bill on the same subject will be laid on the table.

CLOSE OF ALLEY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2217) to provide for the closing of a part of an alley in square 185 in the city of Washington, D. C.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. This bill provides simply for the closing of a short alley that was platted on the map but never opened, in lieu of another alley to be closed which was never closed, and of which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia report that there is no objection to closing it. I ask unanimous consent to consider it now.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and instructed on the petition of the owner of all the property fronting on that portion of an alley 15 feet wide, and running north and south through lot 30, square 185, to declare said part or portion of said alley to be closed, and the title therein is hereby declared to be vested in the owner of all the property fronting on said alley.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Before that——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I ask to have a letter from the Commissioners read.

Mr. SAYERS. Before consent is given, I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I wish to know whether there has been a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia—the House committee—on this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. There has not been——

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). Or whether this is simply a Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It is a Senate bill. But I will state to the gentleman that I submitted it to one member of the House committee at least, Mr. RICHARDSON, and there is no objection to it.

Let the letter of the Commissioners be read, which explains the whole matter. It shows this alley has been closed for many years and is of no public use; that there is another open alley near it, and this bill is simply to remove a cloud upon the title. This alley was never opened, and was to take the place of an alley that was never closed.

Mr. SAYERS. We ought to have some report from the Committee on the District of Columbia on this bill.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But if the gentleman will permit the reading of the communication from the Commissioners on this subject he will see that this alley was never opened. There is an alley within a few feet of it which was authorized to be closed, but never was closed. I ask that the communication from the Commissioners be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the communication will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, July 23, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners recommend favorable action on Senate bill 2217, "To provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 185 in the city of Washington, D. C.," which was referred to them for their examination and report. The alley has been closed for many years; does not appear on the records of the surveyor of the District, and is of no public use, as there is already a 15-foot alley opening into the square a short distance from it, as appears on the accompanying plat.

GEO. TRUESDELL,
Acting President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Senator ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Who will acquire the title in the event of the passage of this bill?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Riggs. He owns on both sides of the alley. There is a building partly completed on this alley——

Mr. DOCKERY. Who is the owner of it?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Senator QUAY. This is simply to remove a cloud on the title.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Let me ask the gentleman if this has been referred to the District Committee?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. It has been referred to some of the members of the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Because, as a member of that committee, I have never seen it.

Mr. KILGORE. This ought to be sent to the House Committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. KILGORE. Let it go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

W. H. HUGO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1549) for the relief of W. H. Hugo.

Mr. JOSEPH. A similar bill has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill now.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. Let this bill be referred; I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask—and I presume it is the wish of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH]—that that bill lie on the table for the present. It is a matter I know something about.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will remain on the table for the present.

RIGHT OF APPEAL IN CERTAIN CASES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1346) to remove the bar of the statute of limitations and give the right of appeal in certain cases.

Mr. MCGANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCGANN] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. The Clerk will report it.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I object. This is too important a measure to be called up by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER OCEANO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2150) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano, of New York, N. Y.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. PAGE] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill. The Clerk will report it, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. REED. I do not know what the bill is, but for the present I will object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be printed and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

GRACELAND CEMETERY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2245) to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. HEARD], whom I do not now see in his seat, desires to make some motion in reference to that bill, and I ask that it lie on the table until Monday morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will lie on the table until Monday morning.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were severally read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the committees named below:

Joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing Commander Dennis W. Mullan, United States Navy, to accept a medal presented to him by the Chilean Government—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A bill (S. 2118) authorizing the sale of title of the United States of a tract of land in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, to William H. and George Bobinger—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 2151) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, approved April 24, 1894—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GARRETT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 108) to fix the times and places for holding the Federal courts in the State and district of Nebraska; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DURBOROW, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. BARWIG, for this day, on account of sickness.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR THE EXPENDITURES OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 208) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved June 29, 1894, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government."

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," approved June 29, 1894, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 14th day of August, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will state, for the information of the House, the condition of the appropriation bills. The Army, diplomatic and consular, fortification; legislative, judicial, and executive; Military Academy, Navy, pensions, and Post-Office appropriation bills have become laws or are in the hands of the President. The agricultural and Indian appropriation bills have been partially agreed upon in conference. The District of Columbia and river and harbor appropriation bills are in conference; and the sundry civil and general deficiency bills have not yet been reported to the Senate by the Appropriations Committee of that body.

I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

TOWBOAT FUTURE CITY.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 207.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 207) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the towboat Future City, her barges, cargoes, etc.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the legal or equitable owners or claimants of the steam towboat Future City, her barges in tow, cargoes thereon, freights and personal effects contained in them, alleged to have been sunk, lost, or greatly damaged by collision with the United States vessels of war Atlanta, Galena, and Richmond, in the Mississippi River, at the city of New Orleans, on or about the 7th day of May, 1888, be referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction and authority to hear and determine the same to judgment, with the right of appeal, as in other cases: Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether or not the Navy Department ordered a board of inquiry to investigate the circumstances attending the collision?

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Not that I am aware of. I will state that a bill exactly similar to this passed the House in the Fifty-second Congress, but did not pass the Senate, owing to the want of time. It has passed the Senate this session, and has been unanimously approved by the House committee, and its passage recommended by that committee. It is simply to refer to the Court of Claims to find the damages.

Mr. COOMBS. It authorizes a judgment.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. A similar bill passed the Fifty-second Congress without any objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the bill until I can prepare an amendment. I am willing that the bill should pass, provided there is an amendment made to it.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. I ask that it lie on the table for the present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman an opportunity to ask for its consideration.

REGISTER FOR STEAMER OCEANO.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill S. 2150; and if so, I would like to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of that bill again.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2150) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano, of New York, N. Y.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asked unanimous consent to consider this bill and the gentleman from Maine objected. The Chair understands the gentleman from Maine withdraws his objection. Is there further objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOUD. I think there ought to be some explanation of this bill. The report ought to be read or some explanation given as to what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again reported.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JOHN C. NUSS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6226) for the relief of John C. Nuss, private, Company C, Sixth West Virginia Cavalry.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dishonorably discharging John C. Nuss as a private in Company C, Sixth West Virginia Cavalry, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of the date of said order.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay or emoluments shall become due by the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask if this bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill to which the gentleman from Virginia objected when it was up in the House before. It is one which can not under the rules be considered at the Friday night session, and it is not even required to be considered in Committee of the Whole. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES. I object to its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

MARY E. HAMILTON.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6417) to pension Mary E. Hamilton, widow of David Hamilton, soldier in Indian war of 1818.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension rolls and pay a pension of $12 per month to Mrs. Mary E. Hamilton, of Williamson County, Tenn., she being the widow of David Hamilton, who served in the Indian war of 1818.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if this bill has been through the mill on some previous Friday night session.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I called this bill up the other day when the gentleman was present.

Mr. KILGORE. But I did not agree to its consideration.

Mr. COX. I have been at every Friday night session since Congress met, and I can not get the bill through there. I know this old lady.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that the gentleman knows the claimant, and all that, but that does not answer my question.

Mr. COX. We never can get to it in the Committee of the Whole. I have been here at every Friday night session during this session trying to get this bill through.

Mr. KILGORE. If you were here, and all the balance of the members were here, there would never be any trouble about passing such bills as you desire.

Mr. COX. I have been here every night. Where have you been?

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think we ought to make flesh of one and fowl of another.

Mr. COX. This is the bill that you agreed with me the other day you would not object to.

Mr. KILGORE. Did I agree not to object to the bill?

Mr. COX. This old lady is my near neighbor, and I have been trying to get her this pension for two years.

Mr. KILGORE. When did I agree with you about this bill?

Mr. COX. When I called it up the other day. Do not go back on me. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee for the consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COX, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MON-SI-MOH.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 207) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to approve, if in his discretion he deems the same proper and advisable, and upon such terms and limitations as he may impose, that certain lease made and executed by Mon-Si-Moh (commonly called Moose Dung) to Ray W. Jones of lot 1, in section 34, in township 154 north, of range 43 west, in the county of Polk and State of Minnesota, which said lease is now on file in the Office of Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Interior Department has been consulted about this?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Yes. The Department has no authority under the law to approve or disapprove, and this joint resolution simply gives the Secretary authority, if, in his discretion, it will be for the interest of this Indian chief.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CAPT. ISAAC D. TOLL.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5659) to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to increase the pension of Capt. Isaac D. Toll, late of Company E, Fifteenth United States Infantry, in the war with Mexico, from $8 to $20 per month.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions was read, as follows:

Line 6, strike out "twenty," before the word "dollars," and insert "twelve."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. JONES. I will ask the gentleman whether that bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WEADOCK. It has not. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JONES. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7494) disposing of four condemned cannon of the Navy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to supply the Grand Army post of Sac City, Iowa, with four condemned cannon for use in decorating the pedestal of the soldiers' monument in Sac City, Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Has this matter been reported favorably by a committee?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes, sir; and it is approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TOWBOAT FUTURE CITY.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] withdraws his objection to the bill which I called up a while ago, and I ask that the bill be now considered.

The bill was again read as printed above.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "thereof," in line 14, page 2, insert: "And provided further, That no judgment shall be rendered against the Government unless it shall affirmatively appear from the evidence adduced that such collision was the result of negligence on the part of the officers in command of said vessel of war."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COBB of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

C. P. GOOCH.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3334) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to C. P. Gooch certain money due him for carrying the mail.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to pay to C. P. Gooch the sum of $65, being balance due him for carrying the mail on route No. 8237, in the State of Louisiana, from January 1, to March 31, 1861.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, there are several cases of this character, and I think I shall have to object.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I am sure the gentleman will not object when he examines the evidence in this case.

Mr. BURROWS. I will look at it later.

Mr. COOPER of Texas (at a later stage of the proceedings). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill which I called up a while ago.

Mr. BURROWS. I see that evidence from the Treasury Department shows that this man was not paid by the Confederate government, and as he died in 1860 he could not have been paid.

The bill was again read as above.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. Since the introduction of the bill I have learned of the death of the original contractor, and his death makes this amendment necessary.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the words "pay to," in the caption of the bill, the words "the heirs or legal representatives of."

Also, insert the same words after the words "pay to," in line 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM HENDERSHOTT.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1377) for the relief of William Hendershott, of Butteville, Oregon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed, on application of William Hendershott, of Marion County, Oregon, and on proof being made by the said Hendershott to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the land hereinafter described was, in November, 1854, filed upon at the Oregon City land office, in the State of Oregon, as a donation land claim under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850, by Louis Forcier; that he resided upon and cultivated the same for four consecutive years; that he proffered final proof to said land office in 1858, and that such proof was rejected for the reason that he could not establish the fact that he was a citizen of the United States; and further, that he, William Hendershott, was a purchaser in good faith of said premises by mesne conveyances from said Louis Forcier, and that he is in possession of and has made valuable improvements thereon, to issue to him, the said William Hendershott, his heirs and assigns, a patent for the following-described pieces and parcels of land, to wit: Lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in section 21, township 4 south, of range 1 west of the Willamette meridian, containing 97 acres, in the Oregon City land district, in the County of Marion and State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I should like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. The report is brief, and I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. SHAW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims have had under consideration Senate bill 1377, and find that said bill extends to William Hendershott, of Butteville, Oregon, his heirs and assigns, the right, under the restrictions named in the bill, to receive from the Secretary of the Interior a patent to lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, in section 21, township 4 south, of range 1 west of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon, and containing 97 acres.

From the information before the committee we are satisfied that in November, 1854, one Louis Forcier filed upon said land at the Oregon City land office, in the State of Oregon, as a donation land claim under the act of Congress approved September 27, 1850. That the said Louis Forcier resided upon and cultivated said land for four consecutive years as required by law. That he proffered final proof to said land office in 1858, and his proof was rejected for the reason that he could not establish the fact that he was a citizen of the United States. That William Hendershott was a purchaser in good faith of said land from said Louis Forcier, and is in possession of the same and has made valuable improvements thereon.

As no patent can issue under this bill until the foregoing has been proven to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior, the committee unanimously recommended that the bill pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TRACEY. I will ask the gentleman whether the Interior Department has made any criticism of this bill.

Mr. ELLIS of Oregon. This is a Senate bill. It provides that the matter shall go to the Secretary of the Interior, and that if the facts set forth in the bill are proven, then the Secretary may issue the patent.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ELLIS of Oregon, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADALINE J. PROPS.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6228) granting a pension to Adaline J. Props.

The bill, together with the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole, was read.

Mr. TERRY. This bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole and its passage recommended. I hope there will be no objection.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. There are six other pension bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole at Friday night sessions. If there be no objection these bills might now be submitted to the House for action.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to disposing of these six bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole at Friday night sessions?

There was no objection.

PENSION BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, were taken up, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole adopted, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and the bills were severally read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider the votes by which they were respectively passed was laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 6405) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Kelleher, late private Company C, Thirty-eighth Illinois Volunteers.

A bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill.

A bill (H. R. 6650) granting a pension to Samuel Burns.

A bill (H. R. 2920) for the relief of John Maholm.

A bill (H. R. 2996) for the relief of Mrs. E. S. Luke, widow of John L. Luke, late a soldier in the Black Hawk war.

WILLIAM E. BOND.

Mr. BUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6852) for the relief of William E. Bond.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William E. Bond the sum of $307.43, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. REED. We should like to know something about this.

Mr. BUNN. The report, which is short, explains the matter fully. I ask that it be read.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of William E. Bond, having considered the same, submit the following report:

Your committee find that William E. Bond was appointed collector of customs for the district of Albermarle, in the State of North Carolina, on the 1st of October, 1888, and served out his term.

During the continuance of his term, that is between the 1st of October, 1888, and the 19th of October, 1892, at which time he surrendered the office, he paid out for rent of building and for fuel used therein the sum of $307.43, and no part thereof has ever been paid back to him by the Government.

The committee further find that previous to his taking charge of the office, the rent and fuel account was regularly paid by the Government. Since Mr. Bond left the office, the identical building rented by him is still used and paid for by the Government and the fuel account is also paid by the Government, and the reasons given for not allowing the same to him was "insufficiency of funds."

The amount claimed by Mr. Bond is not more than has been allowed annually since 1886, with the exception of the period for which he charges, during which nothing was allowed.

The Secretary of the Treasury in a letter to the Hon. B. H. BUNN, chairman of Committee on Claims, says:

"In view of the fact that prior to and subsequent to the period that Mr. Bond was collector of customs at this port, the expenses for rent of office and fuel was paid by the Government. I can see no objection why this same expense should not be borne by the Government during the period Mr. Bond was collector."

Your committee then report the petition back to the House with the accompanying bill and recommend that said bill do pass.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BUNN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMES & DETRICK.

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3049) for the relief of Ames & Detrick, of San Francisco, in the State of California.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to Ames & Detrick, manufacturers of grain bags at San Francisco, or to the person or persons legally entitled to receive the same, the amounts actually collected from said firm and its predecessors, Detrick & Co., E. Detrick & Co., and E. Detrick, for alleged extra expenses incurred by customs officers in supervising the export of grain bags, with benefit of drawback over and above the 10 per cent retention provided by law.

Mr. SAYERS. We should like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. LOUD. Ames & Detrick were manufacturers of grain bags for export; and for two or three years the collector of customs required them to pay for the services of the inspectors at Port Costa, Cal., where these bags were exported. This firm repeatedly protested against the payment of this money, but could get no satisfaction until finally the case was carried to the United States circuit court, before Justice Sawyer, the determination of the court being that the money had been illegally exacted from these exporters.

This firm had not only been compelled to pay for one inspector who might have been employed in looking after these bags for export, but they were compelled to pay sometimes for as many as four inspectors, who were doing other duty at the place. The court determined that this was not a proper charge on the manufacturers. The bags were properly marked in the process of manufacture, and required no duty on the part of the Government.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me ask the gentleman if this has been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. LOUD. It has been, and there is a short letter here from A. B. Nettleton, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, which, if the gentleman desires, I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 11, 1890.

SIR: Referring to the letter addressed to your committee by this Department, July 31, 1890, respecting House bill 6538, for the relief of Messrs. Ames & Detrick, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of report of the special agent of the Department at San Francisco, who was directed to make a thorough inquiry into the matter, in view of the strong presentation made under oath by one of the parties interested, a copy of which will be found herewith, that injustice had been done to them by the letter above referred to, both in the summary of facts and in the omission of any suggestions touching the equitable readjustment of their cases.

The Department believes that it should not withhold from the committee the new facts disclosed and the particular circumstances of the case, as set forth in the report of the special agent, which exhibit equitable grounds for the interference of Congress not fully appearing heretofore in the records of the Department.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

A. B. NETTLETON,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. WM. MCKINLEY,
Chairman Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to withdraw this bill for the present, so that I can make some inquiry into it. There is no recommendation from the Acting Secretary in this communication. Besides, it is an indefinite appropriation. We do not know how much the bill carries.

Mr. LOUD. It can not carry exceeding $10,000. I will state to the gentleman that it has been repeatedly reported favorably. There is no doubt in the world about the justice of the case. I refer to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, who is thoroughly conversant with the facts. Our committee have been most careful in the examination of these cases, and I will pledge my honor as to the justice and the validity of this claim.

Mr. TRACEY. Does the gentleman know the amount involved in the claim?

Mr. LOUD. It is about $10,000, as I am informed. It is a question of the salary of the inspectors at this port, which salary was charged and paid by this firm.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I must object.

GEORGE ISENSTEIN.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3005) for the relief of George Isenstein.

Mr. KILGORE. I think we had better have the regular order now.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will not make that demand until after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I suppose this is a bill that could be considered at the Friday night sessions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this is not the character of bill which would be in order at the Friday night sessions.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well, then; let this go on for a while longer. I withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to make a record for George Isenstein, late a private in Company A, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteers, three months' service, showing his enlistment to date from the date of muster in of said company, and to grant and issue to him an honorable discharge, to be dated of the date of the mustering out of service of said company and regiment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DOCKERY. There ought to be, Mr. Speaker, some explanation, it seems to me, before that consent is given.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. The report explains the matter very fully.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. BLACK of Illinois) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3005) for the relief of George Isenstein, having had the same under consideration, unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

The circumstances concerning the case are such as to convince the committee that Mr. Isenstein is entitled to the relief asked for in the bill; and inasmuch as he seeks it to simply correct and complete an honorable record, and as no charges of any description are against him, and the failure to muster him in the service of Company A, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteers, as prayed for in the bill, was an inadvertence and omission: and inasmuch as subsequently to the rendering of the services mentioned in the bill he served in the armies of the United States for four years and eight months, it is entirely improbable that any application will ever be made for pension or bounty based upon the services established by the bill.

For all these reasons, and as an act of simple justice, the committee recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BLACK of Illinois, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the committees for reports.

BRIDGE, NEWARK BAY.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported, in lieu of House bill 7339, a bill (H. R. 7839) to bridge Newark Bay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT, MINING LAWS.

Mr. IKIRT, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported back with favorable recommendation in lieu of the bill H. R. 4204, the bill [H. R. 7840] to amend section 2335 of the Revised Statutes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 7537) to incorporate the National Rapid Transit Railway Company; which was ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying report printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at ten minutes past 1 o'clock, the call resting with the Committee on Agriculture.

The Committee on Agriculture was called.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. COVERT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the second morning hour for to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Saturday, the 28th instant, after the second morning hour, be assigned to the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Patents.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6835) to amend Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to copyrights. I ask unanimous consent that the original bill be not read, but that an amended bill agreed to by the committee, in the nature of a substitute, be read and considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the substitute bill reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4966 of Title LX, chapter 3, of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4966. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic or operatic composition for which a copyright has been obtained without the consent of the proprietor of said dramatic or operatic composition, or his heirs or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor, such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That section 4970 of chapter 3, Title LX, of the Revised Statutes, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4970. The circuit courts, and district courts having the jurisdiction of circuit courts, shall have power, upon bill in equity, filed by any party aggrieved, to grant injunctions to prevent the violation of any right secured by the laws respecting copyrights, according to the course and principles of courts of equity, on such terms as the courts may deem reasonable. Any writ of attachment issued in such cases from the said courts in any district against the defendant in any proceeding for contempt may run throughout the United States; and the marshal of said district, or his deputies, may execute the said writ wherever in the United States the said defendant or defendants may be found; and before issuing such writ of attachment, the court may in its discretion require a bond from the plaintiff, in such amount as to the court may seem proper, with sufficient surety or sureties, to the satisfaction of the court, conditioned to pay to the defendant or defendants the damages the said defendants may suffer from such arrest, in case the same be not founded on probable or reasonable cause."

The SPEAKER. This is a substitute. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] asks unanimous consent to substitute this for the original bill.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Are there any copies of this substitute printed, so that members can find out what it is?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I object to the substitution of it, unless we can have copies of it.

Mr. COVERT. The substitute is not in print.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then I think it would be better to put this to one side until we can get copies of it. I observe from the reading of it that it is far-reaching in its second section, and ought to be carefully considered before the House acts upon it.

Mr. COVERT. If the gentleman from Illinois will bear with me for a moment only I think I can satisfy him and the entire House that the amendment proposed by the committee, which has been unanimously agreed to by the committee, is of the most innocent conceivable character.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The trouble about that is, Mr. Speaker—while I have no doubt as to the ability of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] to present his side of the question as clearly and as ably as any man in this House—yet I might take a different view of the effect of that second section, and other members of the House might, and I think before we embark upon the consideration of this bill there should be copies printed, so that each member can have one before him, and can by an examination of it bring out the whole question.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Are the committee unanimous?

Mr. COVERT. The committee are entirely unanimous upon this substitute, and I am so convinced that three minutes will satisfy the gentleman from Illinois and every member on this floor that I ask the attention of the House.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Was there a full meeting of the committee when the report was made?

Mr. COVERT. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I observe that oftentimes, even when there is a unanimous report, bills which have so come into the House have been amended so that they were scarcely recognizable, and frequently they have been defeated. Now, to my mind, while of course a unanimous report is a matter that should have great weight, yet it is not, in my opinion, sufficient to override the judgment of the House. I think we should have the bill printed and on the desks of members before it is considered.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the Clerk will report the original bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] can offer the other as a substitute.

The original bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4966 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4966. Any person publicly performing or representing any dramatic or operatic composition for which a copyright has been obtained without the consent of the proprietor of said dramatic or operatic composition, or his heirs or assigns, shall be liable for damages therefor, such damages in all cases to be assessed at such sum, not less than $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent performance, as to the court shall appear to be just, and in addition thereto such person or persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year. Any injunction that may be granted by any circuit court of the United States, or by a judge thereof, restraining and enjoining the performance or representation of any such dramatic or operatic composition may be served on the parties against whom such injunction may be granted anywhere in the United States, and shall be operative and may be enforced by proceedings to punish for contempt or otherwise by any other circuit court or judge in the United States, but the defendants in said action, or any or either of them, may make a motion in any other circuit in which he or they may be engaged in performing or representing said dramatic or operatic composition to dissolve or set aside the said injunction upon such reasonable notice to the plaintiff as the circuit or a judge before whom said motion shall be made shall deem proper, service of said motion to be made on the plaintiff in person or on his attorneys in the action. The circuit courts, or judges thereof, shall have jurisdiction to enforce said injunction and to hear and determine a motion to dissolve the same, as herein provided, as fully as if the action were pending or brought in the circuit in which said motion is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following as a substitute.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One moment, Mr. Speaker. Can not we have some opportunity for general debate here?

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the House. Any gentleman has the right to offer an amendment or substitute.

The substitute was read again.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York one or two questions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Under the substitute that you offer, an injunction granted in New York would be as effective in San Francisco, Minneapolis, St. Paul, or Chicago as in New York, would it not?

Mr. COVERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is not so now.

Mr. COVERT. I take it, Mr. Speaker, if an injunction is issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, issued by a Federal court, it is binding upon the conscience of the party served throughout the length and breadth of the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, you seek to ingraft by this bill another principle upon the Federal statutes relating to the granting of injunctions in Federal courts, do you not?

Mr. COVERT. Not as to the granting of injunctions, but as to the enforcement of injunction orders that are granted.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Not as to the granting of orders, but as to the enforcement.

Mr. COVERT. In this special class of cases.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Do you know of any other class of cases where a Federal judge in the State of New York, granting an injunction against certain parties living at the time in Illinois, can enforce it against them in that State?

Mr. COVERT. I can only say that there has been very grave doubt as to whether a court granting an injunction order in the State of Illinois, for instance, or in Ohio, or in the State of New York, could punish by way of contempt for disobedience of that order unless the party in contempt could be found within the circuit of the court issuing the original order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Then the object in presenting this substitute is to give these playwrights the power to punish for contempt where a play is used in Illinois, Minnesota, or California by a judge in New York State.

Mr. COVERT. By the judge issuing the original order in whatever circuit that judge may sit.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, a judge in New York, if this substitute should become law, would have the right to send out his attachment and arrest a person in the city of San Francisco and take him to New York and punish him in New York.

Mr. COVERT. That is it precisely.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, I want to ask the gentleman again if it is not a fact that in no other legal question, it makes no difference what may be involved, is that power granted to a Federal judge?

Mr. COVERT. I am not aware, I am frank to say, that this power is granted or sought to be invoked in any other class of cases.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. One other question. If I understand your substitute correctly, it provides that even after the injunction is granted, if on final hearing, or on a preliminary motion to that effect, the injunction is dissolved, no damages will accrue to the person who has been restrained by the order of the court if there was reasonable or probable cause for the granting of the injunction.

Mr. COVERT. The substitute specially provides that the court, on application, may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, compel the giving of bonds providing for damages to the party improperly arrested.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The point I am getting at is this: I may not understand your substitute correctly, but I understand from the reading, as I gathered it, that if the injunction is finally dissolved, either on a hearing on the merits of the case or on a motion to that effect—that if at the time the injunction was granted there was probable cause for so doing, there is no legal redress to the defendant in damages by reason of the granting of the injunction.

Mr. COVERT. That is not the bill at all.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman understands in all other classes of cases questions where an injunction is granted, if it is wrongly granted, it makes no difference what the question may be, the complainant must respond to the defendant in damages.

Mr. COX. In connection with that idea, suppose I should apply to a Federal judge in New York, could I under this bill restrain a company that is playing in San Francisco?

Mr. BOATNER. You can not do that.

Mr. COX. I am not talking about the fact, but about the question of power.

Mr. COVERT. I think, Mr. Speaker, I can make the provisions of the substitute so clear that it will satisfy the minds of all these gentlemen.

Mr. COX. I am done with it with one more question. You assume that a Federal judge in the State of New York can enjoin a company from playing a copyright play in San Francisco?

Mr. LAPHAM. No.

Mr. COVERT. No; this bill only seeks to provide adequate means for the punishment of those guilty of disobedience to the order of the court.

Mr. COX. Who grants the order?

Mr. COVERT. It is simply punishment for contempt.

Mr. COX. Who grants the order? Can a judge of the Federal court in New York grant it against a company which is playing in San Francisco, for instance?

Mr. COVERT. He can grant an order to be served on any person within the jurisdiction of the court, which will be binding upon the conscience of every person within the United States.

Mr. COX. One more question——

Mr. COVERT. I must decline to yield further now. I shall try in the brief statement I propose to make to satisfy all these gentlemen.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Before you go on, there is another question I desire to ask.

Mr. COVERT. I beg the gentleman to wait until I conclude my statement, and then I will try to answer all questions that are not covered by that statement.

Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill, or of the substitute, is twofold in character. The first is merely to correct what I assume to have been an inadvertence in the passage of the original dramatic copyright law. The statute as it stands protects the holders of copyrights of dramatic productions only, and contains no reference to productions of an operatic character. The committee thought there was no reason why the same safeguards should not be thrown about the one class of literary property as around the other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not the effect of this bill to extend immensely the powers of the United States courts?

Mr. COVERT. I do not think so, and the committee were unanimously of that opinion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Another question. Is there any law anywhere on any subject which gives the United States courts as far-reaching jurisdiction as this bill proposes to give them on this subject?

Mr. COVERT. The answer to that interrogatory has already been made to a similar question by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I ask the gentleman to wait until I conclude my statement, and see if he is not perfectly satisfied with the substitute as it stands.

As to the other provisions of this bill. A practice has existed for a number of years past—it has increased materially within the last few years—for persons in various sections of the country to appropriate to their own use plays and operas that had been composed by American authors and duly copyrighted by them. These people have seized the privilege of representing these plays in different sections of the country without any thought of making compensation to the author or to the owner or to the manager whose property is thus feloniously taken and used. I have among the papers on my desk a list of duly and regularly copyrighted American plays advertised for sale in manuscript. They are not printed. The pirates send somebody to take stenographic notes of the dialogues and the situations.

These copies are typewritten, and are publicly advertised for sale to anybody who may want them at the nominal price of $5 for each play. Some of the most successful plays that the country has ever seen, the works of Mr. Bronson Howard, Mr. Henry Guy Carleton, Mr. David Belasco, and others—plays that have put the managers of theaters to infinite expense in production—have been thus pirated, publicly advertised for sale, and sold to whoever chose to purchase them and perform them. Now, the question of my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and of my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] may be, Why should there be any difference made between the man who violates the copyright of a play and the man who violates the copyright of a book; why is not the civil procedure which is provided for the enforcement of literary rights just as applicable to one kind of literary property as to the other?

The answer is simply this: Everybody who violates the copyright of a book, everybody who pirates a copyrighted book and prints it, is presumably a man of some attachable means. Presumably he has some place of business, he has the implements of his business, he has a fixed habitat, and even if the party aggrieved should not be able to make the violator of his copyright of a book responsible in money damages, at all events the offender is generally within reach of the civil process of the court and can be enjoined from further wrongful acts. These conditions do not apply to the case of the play pirate.

He is generally a man without attachable means; in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred he is a man of no fixed habitat. A dramatic composition, differing in this respect from a printed book, is valuable not for the number of copies of it that may be sold—because ordinarily the successful play is not for sale—but for the rendition of it, for its performance upon the stage; and once anything is done to belittle the value of a dramatic representation, if it be garbled or improperly presented or rendered by incompetent performers, loss, and very heavy loss, is inflicted upon author and manager alike. The production loses in value by reason of these conditions or any of them. These people who thus surreptitiously obtain copies of plays and operas which have been duly copyrighted, and who thus unlawfully produce them, flit from circuit to circuit and from State to State. They ordinarily give representations of the play for one night only in one particular place, and then hasten off somewhere else. Great embarrassment has arisen in attempting to follow them up in order to serve the processes of the courts upon them. The bill as introduced, and, indeed, at one time as agreed upon by the majority of the committee, made the larceny of plays in this way a misdemeanor, and subjected the offender to the possibility of fine and imprisonment.

But a majority of the committee upon reconsideration thought that more moderate measures might perhaps be better adapted to the purpose—at all events at first; and so we have unanimously agreed upon this substitute, the only effect of which is this: To remove the embarrassments existing now as to the punishment of these people who disobey the injunctions of the courts. The process of injunction having been obtained, sometimes with great trouble and expense, and duly served upon him, at once upon receiving the injunction order the play pirate goes to some other circuit, and it has been found impossible under the existing law to punish him for the disobedience of the injunction order, because of the difficulty of effecting service upon him in the circuit of a court other than that which issued the original injunction.

The sole object of this bill is to give to the United States marshal of the circuit in which the order was originally issued by the court the power to follow these men into another circuit if necessary, and to arrest them for disobedience of that order and bring them before the home court that they may be adequately punished for the contempt. That is all there is of this bill.

Dramatic authors and managers have alike asked for a very much greater measure of relief than the committee felt at liberty to accord them; and we unanimously thought that we were meting out but a very small measure of justice to these gentlemen in reporting the substitute which has been submitted to the House.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Before the gentleman takes his seat allow me to ask a question. This substitute, I understand, enables a writ to be issued, for instance, from the circuit court in New York, directing the arrest of somebody in Texas for violation of the injunction granted in the New York circuit?

Mr. COVERT. That is it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, could anybody be arrested in Texas who was not a party to the original proceeding, who had not had his day in court when the injunction was granted?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly not. That would be a physical, or at least a legal, impossibility.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then A B may be enjoined in New York, having had his day in court; C D or E F, however, might present the same play without authority in Texas, or an amateur company, if you please, in Dallas, Tex., might present the play there; in which case, as I understand, they would not be subject to arrest because they had not been parties to the original suit.

Mr. COVERT. The process runs only against those who have been expressly restrained by injunction, and who have been guilty of disobedience of the injunction.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And who have been made parties to the original proceeding?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman is clear upon that point, his explanation obviates one objection I would have had to this proposed legislation. Now, one other question. Here is this uncertain kind of property; for it is uncertain and in one sense nonvaluable property, because of the ease with which parties may take this property and use it 3,000 miles away from where the play is originally produced and thus defraud the playwright or the author. And at the same time an ordinary civil suit would not avail, because the defendant would beat the plaintiff on his execution.

I recognize the hardship. But does the gentleman think it well to go as far as this legislation proposes and to establish this precedent, which might have very serious consequences hereafter? In other words, would it not be better that this uncertain and intangible kind of property should partially lose its value rather than establish a precedent that would make a writ issued in New York or any other particular circuit run into all other circuits?

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I differ radically from my distinguished friend from Illinois——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I was merely asking the question——

Mr. COVERT. In the estimate to be placed upon the value of this sort of property. The gentleman refers to it as property of uncertain and vague value.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It seems that I failed to make myself understood. I recognize the value of this property and the propriety of protecting it. But I recognize that, like some other species of property, it is intangible; and it is a sort of property that can very easily get away from the control of its owners. At the same time I acknowledge the value of this property. In supposing that I do not, the gentleman has misconceived my position. My only question was whether, for the sake of protecting this particular kind of property, we should establish a precedent which may prove unsafe in other matters?

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, I have sought to explain the peculiar conditions which surround this sort of property. I have tried to explain the difference in the conditions which surround literary property of this sort and the property that an author has in a book which he has composed and which has been printed. These play pirates are migratory in their habits; it is part of their business to be so.

Probably in a good many instances they could not attract anything like a full audience on the second night's performance at any one particular place; and, again, I think that they are in a hurry often to get from point to point, probably to avoid the service of court papers.

Mr. LAPHAM. Or their board bills.

Mr. COVERT. And possibly the adjustment of their obligations in many cases, as suggested.

If these people had any fixed places of residence, if they were not migratory in their habits, if experience and the hardest possible experience had not demonstrated the absolute fact that the law is insufficient as it now stands, the committee would not ask the House to give any other or further power to the courts. But this seems to be the only way in which this kind of property can be protected, and the only way in which and by which the Federal courts can protect themselves and assure obedience to the solemn and formal orders that have their issuance from the courts.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me again, is it practicable to make every playwright all over the country a party to a proceeding of this kind?

Mr. COVERT. Mr. Speaker, to the credit of the dramatic profession as a rule, and to the credit of theatrical managers as a rule, this measure is not aimed at them. There is absolutely no necessity to invoke the law, so far as the very large majority of the dramatic profession is concerned. It is only to those people who are as barren of conscience as of attachable means to which the bill or the substitute could under any conditions or circumstances apply. It has no reference to the members of the dramatic profession or to the managers generally of reputable theaters.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In other words, then, if I understand the gentleman aright, there are people in the United States who have no property, and that to these people without property, who place their ideas or rather the ideas of the author on the boards in the shape of theatrical productions, to them and to them alone, with certain modifications, this act applies; and being worth nothing, they could defeat the plaintiff on an execution, and therefore you propose to give the exceptional remedy of issuing a writ of attachment and punishing them for contempt and putting the party in jail for violating the rights of property, because they have no property, and necessarily an execution levied against them would amount to nothing.

Mr. COVERT. The gentleman states only one part of the proposition, and he states that in a florid and unfair way, which is not natural to the gentleman from Illinois. I do not see how he can draw the conclusion, and I object to the gentleman conveying the impression, that there is any attempt to persecute or prosecute these people simply because they have no attachable means. I only stated it as one of the reasons why under existing law there was no relief given in such cases, and as an illustration to show the necessity for the adoption of the substitute recommended by the committee. But the primary reason is because of the fact that these people are of migratory habits; that they flit from circuit to circuit of the courts, and from State to State, thus preventing the service on them of the processes of the courts which could be effective in ordinary cases.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COVERT. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just one moment in connection with what the gentleman has been stating.

He does not desire to misrepresent me, because at this time I have not concluded whether I shall vote for the bill or not. When a bill is presented for enactment one naturally falls into the habit of suggesting doubt and criticism to see what answer would be made, and whether there are valid objections to the measure. My object is to get information.

Mr. COVERT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not the desire of the authors of the bill to punish only for disobedience of the orders of the court, instead of extorting money from these parties?

Mr. COVERT. Why, of course; that is the sole and only purpose of this proposed legislation.

Mr. HICKS. For contempt of the orders of the court?

Mr. COVERT. It is simply an attachment for disobedience of the orders of the court regularly issued and served, applicable to none others than those who violate the injunction regularly and properly issued.

[Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COVERT) there were—ayes 57, noes 28.

So the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE FIRST AUDITOR,
Washington, D. C., July 18, 1894.

SIR: Your communication of the 11th instant, addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, relating to House resolution 121, authorizing the proper officers of the Treasury Department to examine and certify claims in favor of certain counties in Arizona, and now pending before the Senate Committee on Claims, has been referred to me.

In reply to your inquiry why these claims were not paid according to the terms of the statute referred to in the resolution, I have the honor to state:

The act of March 3, 1889, Statutes at Large, volume 25, page 1004, provides that hereafter the cost of the trial of such cases in the courts of the several Territories for crimes mentioned in the act of March 2, 1885, shall be audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury and paid out of money for similar expenses for the trial of criminal cases in the courts of the United States.

The expenses of the trial of criminal cases in the courts of the United States are paid from the following appropriations:

Fees of district attorneys, United States courts.
Fees of clerks, United States courts.
Fees of commissioners, United States courts.
Fees and expenses of marshals, United States courts.
Fees of jurors, United States courts.
Fees of witnesses, United States courts.
Support of prisoners, United States courts.
Pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts.
Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts.

The attorneys, clerks, sheriffs, and justices of the peace in Arizona Territory who performed services in this class of cases, should each have made out separate accounts, which accounts should have been sworn to and approved by the courts, and they would then have been paid from the proper appropriation. Fees of jurors, fees of witnesses, expenses of care of prisoners, meals for jurors, and miscellaneous expenses in these cases should have been approved by the court and presented to the marshal of Arizona Territory for payment out of the proper appropriation.

This, however, was not done; the various counties in Arizona paid the fees and expenses in the prosecution in these cases, and are now seeking to recover the sums so paid by them. The accounts can not be allowed by the accounting officers for the reason that they are not sworn to by the parties performing the services, and are not divided and separate accounts presented under each appropriation. These claims are, in my opinion, just and proper charges against the United States, and should be paid. After a consultation with the First Comptroller, I addressed a communication to the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, Delegate from Arizona Territory, suggesting that a resolution be passed providing for their settlement. Should the resolution mentioned above be passed the various counties that have expenses in this class of cases will be required to make out itemized accounts of the costs in each case with proof that the same have been paid. They will also be required to have such accounts sworn to and approved by the court before whom prosecutions were had.

E. B. BALDWIN, First Auditor.

Hon. SAMUEL PASCO,
Chairman, Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the joint resolution come from the Committee on Territories?

Mr. PASCO. It comes from the Committee on Claims. I have just sent to the desk a letter from the Treasury Department favoring its passage. The letter will be inserted in the RECORD. It is included in the report which has been made by the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. This is important legislation, and I merely wanted to know whether any standing committee has had charge of it.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2795) to amend section 5 of the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to organize the Life-Saving Service," to report it without amendment. It is very important that there shall be immediate action upon this bill, and I ask that it may now be considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read again.

Mr. FRYE. It is a House bill, extending the Life Saving Service over the months of May and August.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have some information on the subject. Has the bill just come over from the other House?

Mr. FRYE. The bill came from the other House four days ago. It has been considered by the Committee on Commerce, and I was directed to report it favorably. It extends the service on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts from eight months to ten months, so as to include the months of May and August, which during the last four years have been found to be as serious months as any during the year, and the Weather Bureau now regards those two months as a period when we are liable to have very severe tornadoes.

The Senator will remember that last August we had two terrible ones, and there was heavy loss, owing to the lack of life-saving service. The other House has extended the period over the two months of May and August at the request of the Treasury Department and the Superintendent of the Life Saving Service, and has decreased the pay of the sailors from $65 a month to $60.

Mr. HAWLEY. August is really the hurricane month.

Mr. FRYE. August is really the hurricane month, as the Senator from Connecticut suggests. I am sorry the House reduced the pay. I think it was done under a misunderstanding, but the Superintendent says he does not desire to risk having any amendments made to the bill; that it is very important to have it passed now.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARINE HOSPITALS.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4346) extending the benefits of the marine hospitals to the keepers and crews of life-saving stations, to report it favorably without amendment. The bill involves no expenditure of money, and I ask that it may be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-SHIP AND RANGE LIGHTS IN BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5312) authorizing the construction of a light-ship with fog signal, to be established to the eastward of Boston Light, Massachusetts, and for the establishment of range lights in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, to report it without amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF AFFIDAVITS IN LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6719) to provide for the validation of affidavits made before United States commissioners in all land entries, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DUBOIS. The bill is accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which is embodied in the House report, and will explain the bill fully.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, April 14, 1894.

SIR: I transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on joint resolution (H. Res. 136) "to provide for the validation of affidavits made before United States commissioners in all land entries," and joint resolution (H. Res. 137) "providing that all entries under the homestead, preëmption, and timber-culture or desert-land law made between May 26, 1890, and the date of the approval, etc., are hereby validated."

I concur in the views of the Commissioner that the relief proposed by said resolution should be granted. But I would suggest that it be so amended as to provide:

"That all entries under the homestead, preëmption, timber-culture, or desert-land law, based on affidavits made before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the State or Territory in which such entries were made, and where such affidavits were made in accordance with the regulations and decisions of the General Land Office prior to the passage of the act of May 26, 1890, are hereby validated, if no other objection exists."

This amendment would cover entries in all cases where the affidavits were made before notaries public, which was authorized prior to the passage of the act of May 26, 1890. This act provided—

"That the proof of settlement, residence, occupation, cultivation, irrigation, or reclamation, the affidavit of nonalienation, the oath of allegiance, and all other affidavits required to be made under the homestead, preëmption, timber-culture, and desert-land laws, may be made before any commissioner of the United States circuit court, or before the judge or clerk of any court of record of the county or parish in which the lands are situated."

The Land office, however, continued to permit timber-culture affidavits to be made before notaries public, until the decision of the Department in Rhodes vs. Crocker (15 L. D., 249), in which it was held that under the provisions of the act of May 26, 1890, the preliminary affidavit required of the timber-culture applicant can not be made before a notary public.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. T. C. MCRAE,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1471) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of the American Transportation Company for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, in the State of Ohio. I think there will be no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to examine and adjust the claim of the American Transportation Company against the Government of the United States for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, Ohio, under a contract with the United States, and to certify to the proper accounting officers for payment the balance remaining unpaid; and appropriates $5,434.18 in payment thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the agricultural appropriation bill, and ask for its immediate consideration. I will state that the committee have agreed upon every item in the bill, with the exception of the Senate amendment appropriating money for the extermination of the Russian thistle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6937) "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 32, 35, 36, 37, 41, 42, 46, 47, 49, 53, 55, 57, 62, 63, 64, 72, 82, and 85.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 33, 38, 39, 43, 44, 50, 51, 52, 54, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 80, 81, 83, 84, 87, 88, 89, and 90, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "thousand" in lines 6 and 7, page 3 of the bill, the words "two hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$35,360;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,100;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,120;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$243,600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the words "and improving;" and after the word "buildings," in line 21, page 21 of the bill, insert the following: "not including the erection of new buildings;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "or additional apartments not including the erection of new buildings;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: In line 25, page 28 of the bill, strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: On the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

WILKINSON CALL,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
S. M. CULLOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. H. HATCH,
W. S. FORMAN,
DAN WAUGH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CALL. I move that the report be concurred in.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Do I understand that this is a perfect and complete agreement on the part of the conference committee?

Mr. CALL. The conferees could not agree upon the one item as to the appropriation for the extirpation of the Russian thistle. Upon all other portions of the bill they have agreed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Upon that item there is a disagreement, I understand?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir. The House conferees refused to concur in the Senate amendment. The bill is reported back to the Senate with an agreement as to all the other amendments, and as to the Russian thistle amendment without agreement. So it is open to the Senate either to recede from the amendment or to insist upon it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment as to the appropriation for the extirpation of the Russian thistle, and ask for a new conference.

Mr. CALL. The motion before the Senate is that the conference report be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question will first be taken upon concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will allow my motion to be disposed of.

Mr. MANDERSON. What is the motion on the part of the conferees?

Mr. CALL. That the conference report be concurred in.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I did not hear the motion made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. The motion is that the Senate concur in the conference report which embraces all items of disagreement heretofore, but excludes the amendment as to the Russian thistle.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well; it is proper to take the vote on that motion first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida that the Senate concur in the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendment making an appropriation for the extermination of the Russian thistle, and ask for a new conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota, that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference.

Mr. COCKRELL obtained the floor.

Mr. MILLS. I rose to move that the Senate recede from its amendment, but I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. As is well known, this amendment appropriating $1,000,000, was put on the bill in the Senate. The conferees on the part of the Senate did not feel that they would be justified in disobeying the will of the Senate, notwithstanding the fact that the conferees on the part of the House are very positive that they will not agree to the amendment.

We have, therefore, reported it back to the Senate for such instructions as may be deemed necessary. I am willing to do what I can to carry out the will of the Senate, and if the Senate insists upon the amendment and places it back in conference, we shall do the best we can with the other House; but I wish to state in all frankness and candor that I do not believe the House conferees will recede.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I simply desire that the House of Representatives shall have an opportunity to pass upon the merits of the case. The matter has not yet been before the House so as to permit that body to pass upon it. I know of no way to get it before the House except to insist upon the amendment of the Senate and ask for a new conference. I trust that the Senator from Missouri will accept that proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Dakota that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CALL, Mr. BRICE, and Mr. CULLOM were appointed.

LAND FOR GRAVEL PIT AND RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. CAREY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7451) to authorize the entry of land for gravel pits and reservoir purposes and authorizing the grant of right of way for pipe lines, to report it with amendments. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. CAREY. From the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WASHBURN. It is all right.

Mr. CAREY. I ask that the amendments be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report accompanying the bill?

Mr. CAREY. There is a written House report.

Mr. COCKRELL. The practice of having bills that we can not put our hands upon, without having seen them and merely hearing them read, called up and present consideration asked for them, is a very dangerous and unsatisfactory way of legislating. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will delay a few moments until I can get a copy of the bill and examine it.

Mr. CAREY. I have no objection to letting the bill go over and be printed, if the Senator from Missouri desires it. It has been very fully discussed in the other House. If the Senator will hear the bill read I am sure he will have no objection. I can explain it in a minute. It permits the Secretary of the Interior to sell for pipe line purposes and for reservoirs and gravel pits not exceeding 160 acres of land at a value to be appraised by a board of appraisers to be appointed by the Secretary. It applies only to public lands subject to entry under the land laws of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are so many amendments to the bill that I shall be glad if the Senator from Wyoming will let it go over and be printed. Let an order be made that the bill be returned immediately from the Printing Office, so that it can be taken up in the morning.

Mr. CAREY. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over and be printed.

DESERT LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. DUBOIS. I report back favorably from the Committee on Public Lands the bill (H. R. 4448) for the relief of persons who have filed declarations of intention to enter desert lands. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORIAL EXPENSES OF ARIZONA.

Mr. PUGH. The Judiciary Committee authorize me to report back favorably the bill (H. R. 6754) to amend section 15 of an act approving, with amendments, the funding act of Arizona approved June 25, 1890. The importance of the bill to the Territory of Arizona induces me to ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORDON introduced a bill (S. 2261) to further encourage the holding of a World's Exposition at Atlanta, Ga., in the year 1895; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Quadro-Centennial (Select).

Mr. PASCO (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2262) for the relief of John Jackson, formerly of Des Arc, Ark.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 2267) to provide a municipal government for the town of Miami, in the Indian Territory, and attach the same to the Territory of Oklahoma for judicial and other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MARTIN. The bill is accompanied by a petition of citizens of Miami praying for its passage. I move that the bill and accompanying petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2268) granting a pension to Sarah V. Lothrop; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRYE subsequently reported the amendment favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 26th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the House joint resolution proposing to extend the appropriations to carry on the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 208) to continue the provisions of a joint resolution approved June 29, 1894, entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of a joint resolution entitled "A joint resolution to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government," approved June 29, 1894, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect to and including the 14th day of August, 1894.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will state that the joint resolution referred to, which extended the appropriations, will expire to-day, and it is necessary to continue the appropriations. Eight of the thirteen general appropriation bills have been agreed to in conference and have passed. I do not know whether they have been signed by the President; I presume they have been. Of the remaining five three are in conference. One, the agricultural appropriation bill, has just been agreed to except as to one item in the bill. Upon that the Senate has insisted, and it will soon be back in conference. As to another one, the Indian appropriation bill, the conferees will be ready very soon to report to the Senate an agreement upon most of the items and a disagreement upon the others, and an additional conference will be asked. No action has yet been had by the conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

There are two bills not yet reported from the Committee on Appropriations. The sundry civil appropriation bill will be reported to-day, and the Senate will be asked to consider it to-morrow. The general deficiency appropriation bill will be reported to the Senate to-morrow, and the Senate will be asked to consider it just as soon as we can; but it is necessary that this joint resolution shall be passed.

Mr. FRYE. Does the joint resolution cover the 31st day of this month?

Mr. COCKRELL. It continues the appropriations until and including the 14th day of August, which, of course, includes the 31st day of July.

Mr. FRYE. All right.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7071) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of the District of Columbia from taxation, be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That all property belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association in the District of Columbia, used and occupied by that association, shall, so long as the same is so owned and occupied, be exempt from taxation, national and municipal: Provided, That where ground of said association is larger than is reasonably required for its use, or is not actually used for the legitimate purposes of said association, or if said ground or buildings shall be used for private gain, such portion of said ground or buildings as shall not actually be used for the purposes of said association, or from which it derives a rent or income, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against such association.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the force and effect of the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment is a substitute for the bill passed by the House of Representatives. It was drawn by the attorney of the District and I think is very carefully guarded. The bill as passed by the other House proposed to exempt certain property from taxation, but the amendment confines it to property that is actually owned and occupied and shall be no larger in amount than is clearly required for the use of the association, and the exemption fails whenever any of the property is used for private purposes. The Senate committee substitute also cuts off any refunding of taxes already paid which the bill as passed by the House granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FOG SIGNAL AT KEWAUNEE, WIS.

Mr. WASHBURN. I report back favorably without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. 4567) establishing a fog signal at Kewaunee, Wis., and I ask unanimous consent to have it considered at the present time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it a Senate bill?

Mr. WASHBURN. It is a House bill with a House report accompanying it. The bill passed the other House and is reported favorably by the Committee on Commerce.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LANDS TO OKLAHOMA CITY.

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6080) "granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2, and the House agree to the same.

JNO. MARTIN,
A. J. McLAURIN,
JOSEPH M. CAREY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THO. C. McRAE,
D. D. HARE,
J. W. MOON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

PACIFIC STATES CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the special order, being the bill (S. 1295) to reimburse the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada for moneys by them expended in the suppression of the rebellion. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill, and the pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. MANDERSON and Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at end of line 20, page 2, the following proviso:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to the treasurers of said States, or other proper officers of said States authorized to receive and receipt for the same, on behalf of said States, respectively, and shall be converted into the treasuries of said States subject to appropriation by the Legislatures thereof.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a report, the Chair is advised.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. PERKINS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that there can be no possible objection to the amendment proposed by my colleague.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The report will be read at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the report should be read before the amendment is adopted. Let the amendment be read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to know whether that would be fair. The Legislatures may have already taken some action and employed agents. The Legislatures, I understand, have already passed some laws in regard to obtaining assistance, and money has been expended. I hardly think that it would be fair to provide that the money shall be covered into the state treasuries. I think it should be paid to the States themselves, and let them take their own action and take care of it. I do not think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment referred to simply provides that the money shall be paid into the treasuries of the States. Of course if there be any claim against the State of a valid character it can not be affected by the amendment. That was not the design upon the part of those who prepared the amendment. Representing the State of California, I proposed it, and in fact the Senator from Oregon suggested the form of amendment to me, and he is also interested in the matter. I do not think there is anyone in any way interested in the bill who would object to the amendment. There is no objection to it from any source so far as I know.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

Mr. MANDERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the report made from the Committee on Military Affairs by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] is very voluminous, going into great detail in connection with this matter. Certainly every member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I think most of the Senate, know fairly well the nature of this claim. The important consideration that there is in it is whether interest shall be paid upon these amounts. A similar bill has been frequently reported. I suggest that it would be infinitely better for the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] or the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to make a succinct statement of the character of the claim. If we proceed to the reading of the report it will be the end of any business other than the reading of the report to-day.

I would have no objection myself to putting in the day in making a pretense of listening to the report, but there are other matters which are important for the consideration of the Senate. I know that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, is exceedingly anxious to bring forward for the consideration of the Senate to-day if possible the general printing bill; but if we are to have the report read, that is the end of any hope in that direction.

I trust the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his request for the reading of this very full report, and be content with such statement as may be made by those who are directly interested in the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I appreciate the force of what the Senator from Nebraska says. This is an old matter—thirty-odd years old. We have had it time and again before the committees. I was not aware that the bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs at the present session. I did not know that it was called up and set for to-day, and this is the first intimation I have had. The report is very voluminous. There have been many reports made on this claim. It is absolutely impossible for me now, without reading the report or having an extension of time, to get together the points that I want to make in the case.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me? Does he desire further time in the matter?

Mr. COCKRELL. What I want is simply time to run over the report. I have gone over the case, and I have somewhere a memorandum explaining exactly my view of the whole situation, but I did not know that the bill was coming up, and I have not got it here.

Mr. WHITE. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand; but the data I had then I have not before me now, and I can not place my hand upon it.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that there is quite an elaborate statement of data, not published as a Senate document, now in the hands of the chairman of the committee, which I gave him; and that may facilitate the inquiry. Of course, so far as I am concerned, while I called the bill up and had it made a special order for this morning, if the Senator from Missouri desires time to examine it further I shall not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I would be very greatly obliged for further time. I appreciate how the reading of the report would be apparently a waste of time, but I must have time some way or other to get together the points in the case.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator suggest a time when he would be willing to set down the bill as a special order, subject of course to the appropriation bills?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest day after to-morrow—Wednesday.

Mr. WHITE. If there is no objection on the part of others I do not object to that course.

Mr. STEWART. Let the bill go over until Wednesday.

Mr. BATE. I will state concerning the data to which the Senator from California referred that I have not had an opportunity to look into it. It covers four or five pages. I am in the situation of the Senator from Missouri, who is also a member of the Committee on Military Affairs—I was not aware for sometime that the bill had been reported. It was ordered to be reported at a meeting of the committee, at which I was not present, and the Senator from Missouri was also absent when the bill passed the committee. I myself am opposed to the bill, but I do not want——

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Tennessee will excuse me, I will move that the bill go over until the close of the routine business day after to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask the Senator from California, or the Senator from Nevada, in reference to the bill which has just been made a special order for Wednesday, if it is the same matter that was several years before a special board of the War Department?

Mr. PERKINS. It is the same.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is the same matter.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should like to ask if the special report by Maj. Swann, of the Adjutant-General's Office, is printed with the the report of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, to report it favorably, with sundry amendments. I ask that there may be a special order made for the printing and return of the bill to the Senate so that Senators may get it this evening. I make this request with a view to call up the bill to-morrow morning for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 387) to authorize the construction of a life-saving station at or near Rocky Point or East Marion, Long Island, N. Y.;

The bill (H. R. 6384) for the relief of Walter S. McLeod was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2650) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Printing be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section 3, line 7, after the word "Denver," to strike out "Everett Washington;" so as to read:

The Joint Committee on Printing shall fix upon standards of paper for the different descriptions of public printing and binding, and the Public Printer shall, under their direction, advertise in two newspapers, published in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, Omaha, Denver, and Chicago, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 6, after the word "accompanied," to strike out "With a bond payable to the Government in double the amount of their bid, with such surety as may be deemed sufficient by said Joint Committee on Printing or by the Secretary of the Interior," and insert "By a bond approved by a judge or clerk of a court of record in the penalty of $5,000 that the bidder or bidders, if his or their proposal is accepted, shall enter into a contract to furnish the articles proposed for;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. The sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be opened in the presence of the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by them to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government; but they shall not consider any proposal which is not accompanied by a bond approved by a judge or clerk of a court of record in the penalty of $5,000 that the bidder or bidders, if his or their proposal is accepted, shall enter into a contract to furnish the articles proposed for and by satisfactory evidence that the person making it is a manufacturer of or dealer in the description of paper which he proposes to furnish.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 7, after the word "performance," to insert "The contractor shall give bond in such amount as may be fixed by, and to the approval of, the Joint Committee on Printing;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. No contract for furnishing paper shall be valid until it has been approved by the Joint Committee on Printing, if made under their direction, or by the Secretary of the Interior, if made under his direction, according to the provisions of section 9 of this act. The award of each contract for furnishing paper shall designate a reasonable time for its performance. The contractor shall give bond in such amount as may be fixed by, and to the approval of, the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 5, after the word "session," to insert "and the decision of said joint committee or of the Secretary of the Interior shall be final as to the Government;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. In case of difference of opinion between the Public Printer and any contractor for paper respecting its quality, the matter of difference shall be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing or by the Secretary of the Interior when Congress is not in session, and the decision of said joint committee or of the Secretary of the Interior shall be final as to the Government.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that probably the word "Government" had better be stricken out and the words "United States" inserted, as that is the usual designation.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well; there is no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment of the committee will be so modified in the absence of objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after section 16 the following as an additional section.

The remaining number of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives, consisting of 25 copies, shall be furnished to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, as the necessities of their respective offices may require, as rapidly as signatures are completed for such distribution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that in the amendment as to the distribution of the Journals of the Senate and House of Representatives a very great saving will be effected by not sending them to the designated depositories, which would be about 500 in number, for certainly the libraries getting the RECORD will not need the Journal. I suggest that the three libraries in each of the States mentioned to be designated to receive the Journals may be designated by the superintendent of documents rather than by the Secretary of the Interior. I think that would be much better.

Mr. GORMAN. That is a wise suggestion, and I hope the Senator will offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will move to amend, or rather the committee will modify the amendment, by striking out "Secretary of the Interior" and inserting "superintendent of documents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified in the absence of objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let the amendment be read as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

One hundred and forty-four copies, to be distributed to three libraries in each of the States and Territories, to be designated by the superintendent of documents.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [57] 59, line 10, after the word "removed," to strike out "and one copy to each designated depository and State and Territorial library. The custodian of said libraries to indicate to the Public Printer before the beginning of Congress whether bound or unbound copies are desired," and insert "and of all publications of the Executive Departments not intended for their especial use, but made for distribution, 500 copies shall be at once delivered to the superintendent of documents for distribution to designated depositories and State and Territorial libraries;" and after line 18 to strike out:

The Public Printer may furnish without cost to Senators, Members, and Delegates envelopes, ready for mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or any part thereof, or speeches, or reports therein contained. Envelopes so furnished shall contain in the upper left-hand corner thereof the following words, to wit: "Senate United States (or House of Representatives, U. S.). Part of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Free;" and in upper right-hand corner the letters U. S. S. or M. C. But he shall not print any other words thereon, except at the personal expense of the Senator, Member, or Delegate ordering the same.

He may also furnish without cost to Senators, Members, and Delegates blank franks for public documents. Franks so furnished shall contain in the upper left-hand corner thereof the following words, to wit: "Public document. Free. United States Senate (or House of Representatives, U. S.);" and in upper right-hand corner the letters U. S. S. or M. C. But he shall not print any other words thereon, except where it may be desirable to affix the official title of a document. All other words printed thereon shall be at the personal expense of the Senator, Member, or Delegate ordering the same.

At the request of any Congressman the Public Printer is authorized to print upon franks or envelopes used for mailing public documents or seed the facsimile stamp of said Congressman and a special request for return if not called for, and the name of the State and county and city. Said Congressman to deposit with his order the extra expense involved in printing these additional words.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 59. Whenever printing not bearing a Congressional number shall be done for any Department or officer of the Government, except confidential matter, blank forms, and circular letters not of a public character, or shall be done for use of Congressional committees, not of a confidential character, two copies shall be sent, unless withheld by order of the committee, by the Public Printer to the Senate and House Libraries, respectively, and one copy each to the document rooms of the Senate and House, for reference; and these copies shall not be removed; and of all publications of the Executive Departments not intended for their especial use, but made for distribution, 500 copies shall be at once delivered to the superintendent of documents for distribution to designated depositories and State and Territorial libraries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section [59] 61.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee the advisability of striking out the words "the closing of the Fifty-third Congress" and in lieu thereof inserting "first day of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress," as those employés are to be paid up to that date.

Mr. GORMAN. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [59] 61, after the words "until the," it is proposed to strike out "the closing of the Fifty-third Congress" and insert "first day of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress;" so as to read:

Provided, That this section shall not take effect until the first day of the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [60] 62, after the words "Sec. 62," to insert "The Joint Committee on Printing shall designate to the Public Printer a competent person, to be appointed by him, as superintendent of documents, and shall fix and regulate the compensation to be paid by the Public Printer to the person so designated and appointed;" in line 6, after the word "documents," to strike out "in the Interior Department" and insert "so designated and appointed;" in line 20, after the words "shall be," to insert "returned to the Public Printer on the first day of each month, and be by him;" in line 22, after the word "Treasury," to strike out "quarterly and placed to the credit of the general fund for public printing" and insert "monthly;" in line 26, after the word "report," to strike out "annually" and insert "monthly to the Public Printer;" and in line 28, after the word "same," to insert:

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 62. The Joint Committee on Printing shall designate to the Public Printer a competent person, to be appointed by him, as superintendent of documents, and shall fix and regulate the compensation to be paid by the Public Printer to the person so designated and appointed. The superintendent of documents so designated and appointed is hereby authorized to sell at cost any public document in his charge, the distribution of which is not herein specifically directed, said cost to be estimated by the Public Printer and based upon printing from stereotyped plates; but only one copy of any document shall be sold to the same person, excepting libraries or schools by which additional copies are desired for separate departments thereof, and members of Congress; and whenever any officer of the Government having in his charge documents published for sale shall desire to be relieved of the same, he is hereby authorized to turn them over to the superintendent of documents, who shall receive and sell them under the provisions of this section. All moneys received from the sale of documents shall be returned to the Public Printer on the first day of each month, and be by him covered into the Treasury monthly, and the superintendent of documents shall report annually the number of copies of each and every document sold by him, and the price of the same. He also shall report monthly to the Public Printer the number of documents received by him and the disposition made of the same. He shall have general supervision of the distribution of all public documents, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [61] 63, line 4, before the word "Congress," to strike out "Fifty-second" and insert "Fifty-third;" and in line 12, after the word "character," to insert, "He shall also prepare and print in one volume a consolidated index of Congressional documents, and shall index such single volumes of documents as the Joint Committee on Printing shall direct;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 63. The superintendent of documents shall, at the close of each regular session of Congress, prepare and publish a comprehensive index of public documents, beginning with the Fifty-third Congress, upon such plan as shall be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing; and the Public Printer shall, immediately upon its publication, deliver to him a copy of each and every document printed by the Government Printing Office; and the head of each of the Executive Departments, bureaus, and offices of the Government shall deliver to him a copy of each and every document issued or published by such Department, bureau, or office not confidential in its character. He shall also prepare and print in one volume a consolidated index of Congressional documents, and shall index such single volumes of documents as the Joint Committee on Printing shall direct.

Mr. GORMAN. At the end of the amendment which has just been read, after the word "direct," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [61] 63, line 15, after the word "direct," it is proposed to insert:

Of the comprehensive index and of the consolidated index 2,000 copies each shall be printed and bound in addition to the usual number; 200 copies for the use of the Senate, 800 for the use of the House, and 1,000 copies for distribution by the superintendent of documents.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [62] 64, line 7, after the word "libraries," to insert "and document rooms;" and in line 23, after the word "loss," to insert "and a similar invoice shall be prepared and distribution made as above provided at the convening in regular session of each successive Congress;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 64. The Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Clerk and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives shall cause an invoice to be made of all public documents stored in and about the Capitol, other than those belonging to the quota of members of the present Congress, to the Library of Congress, and the Senate and House Libraries, and document rooms, and all such documents shall, by the superintendents, respectively, of the Senate and House folding rooms be put to the credit of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of the present Congress, in quantities equal in the number of volumes and as nearly as possible in value, to each member of Congress, and said documents shall be distributed upon the orders of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, each of whom shall be supplied by the superintendents of the folding rooms with a list of the number and character of the publications thus put to his credit: Provided, That before said apportionment is made copies of any of these documents desired for the use of committees of the Senate or House shall be delivered to the chairmen of such committees: And provided further, That 4 copies of each and all leather-bound documents shall be reserved and carefully stored, to be used hereafter in supplying deficiencies in the Senate and House Libraries caused by wear or loss, and a similar invoice shall be prepared and distribution made as above provided at the convening in regular session of each successive Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert after section [62] 64, line 26, the following as a new section:

SEC. 65. Upon the appointment of the superintendent of documents, as hereinbefore provided, the office of the superintendent of documents in the Department of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, abolished, and all laws now in force providing for the delivery to the Department of the Interior of public documents for distribution, other than such as are for the use of that Department, shall be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding to the proposed new section what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, at the end of section 65, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the distribution of the reports of the Eleventh Census shall be continued and completed by the superintendent of documents under existing laws and regulations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, to insert, after section 65, the following as a new section:

SEC. 66. All official correspondence of the superintendent of documents and all replies to the same shall be entitled to free transmission by mail; and he shall be entitled to frank public documents: Provided, That in the transmission of such mail matter envelopes, labels, or postal cards are used on which the name of the office and the penalty clause are printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after section 66, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 67. The Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed, upon the requisition of the superintendent of documents, to appoint such assistants as may be necessary, and furnish such blanks and to do such printing and binding as are required by his office, the cost of the same to be charged against the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress, and the Public Printer shall provide convenient office, storage, and distributing rooms for the use of the superintendent of documents.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [63] 68, line 8, after the word "sale," to strike out "It shall be the duty of the superintendent of documents, within thirty days after the approval of this act, to prepare a catalogue of the hundreds of thousands of volumes now held in reserve and unavailable for distribution, and which catalogue shall be made accessible to all Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, and he shall apportion each and every sort of book and document equally among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 68. All documents at present remaining in charge of the several Executive Departments, bureaus, and offices of the Government not required for official use shall be delivered to the superintendent of documents, and hereafter all public documents accumulating in said Departments, bureaus, and offices not needed for official use shall be annually turned over to the superintendent of documents for distribution or sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 64, in the following words:

SEC. 64. Where, in the division among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of extra copies of documents printed for the use of Congress, there shall be a remainder beyond the number of 25 to each House of Congress, the surplus beyond 25 shall be turned over by the superintendents of the folding rooms to the superintendent of documents for distribution and sale by him under the provisions of this law. All documents delivered to the superintendent of documents under the provisions of this section shall be divided and placed subject to the orders of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives as follows: One-third of each kind of document shall be set apart for the use of Senators and two-thirds for the use of Members of the House. Each kind of document so set apart shall be divided as nearly as may be equally among the respective members of each House, and the remainders, if any there be, shall be combined with other similar remainders, and from time to time the combination of remainders shall be again divided equitably as nearly as may be among the members of the Senate and the House respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 20, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 69. Whenever in the division among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of documents printed for the use of Congress there shall be an apportionment to each or either House in round numbers, the Public Printer shall not deliver the full number so accredited at the respective folding rooms, but only the largest multiple of the number constituting the full membership of each or either House, including the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and Clerk and Doorkeeper of the House, which shall be contained in the round numbers thus accredited to each or either House, so that the number delivered shall divide evenly and without remainder among the members of the House to which they are delivered; and the remainder of all documents thus resulting shall be turned over to the superintendent of documents, to be distributed by him, first, to public and school libraries for the purpose of completing broken sets; second, to public and school libraries that have not been supplied with any portion of such sets; and, lastly, by sale to other persons; said libraries to be named to him by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; and in this distribution, the superintendent of documents shall see that as far as practicable an equal allowance is made to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [65] 70, line 3, after the word "which," to strike out "shall be printed in the Official Gazette of the Patent Office, and during sessions of Congress also in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and;" in line 6, before the word "month," to insert "preceding;" in line 7, after the word "thereof," to strike out "on the 1st day of July of each year he shall prepare and print in pamphlet form for distribution and sale 2,000 copies of a catalogue of Government publications issued during the year, giving the price of each and where purchasable," and insert "2,000 copies of such catalogue shall be printed in pamphlet form for distribution;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 70. A catalogue of Government publications shall be prepared by the superintendent of documents on the first day of each month, which shall show the documents printed during the preceding month, where obtainable, and the price thereof. Two thousand copies of such catalogue shall be printed in phamplet form for distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see any provision for bringing up the list of Government publications from 1881, since the publication of the descriptive catalogue.

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from Missouri will find it in section [65] 70, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it is on page 32.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what section?

Mr. MANDERSON. At the end of section 63. The superintendent of documents is charged with that duty.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the index. I do not see any provision made for the list of publications between 1881 and the beginning of operations under the pending bill. There will be a hiatus, a lapse of time.

Mr. GORMAN. I will look at that in a moment, and we can go back to it before we get through with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was to strike out section 66, in the following words:

SEC. 66. When extra numbers in excess of 5,000 of any document shall be ordered by Congress, there shall be delivered to the superintendent of documents 500 copies, to be taken ratably from the two Houses of Congress; and where less than 5,000 extra numbers are ordered, the superintendent shall receive 10 per cent of the number. Said copies shall be distributed by the superintendent of documents to designated depositories, preference being given to those named by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [67] 71, line 5, after the word "below," to strike out "500" and insert "1,000;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 71. The superintendent of documents shall thoroughly investigate the condition of all libraries that are now designated depositories, and whenever he shall ascertain that the number of books in any such library, other than college libraries, is below 1,000, other than Government publications, or it has ceased to be maintained as a public library, he shall strike the same from the list, and the Senator, Representative, or Delegate shall designate another depository that shall meet the conditions herein required.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [69] 73, line 3, after the word "same," to strike out "within nine months after his term has expired" and insert "prior to the convening of the next succeeding Congress;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 73. Any Senator, Representative, or Delegate having public documents to his credit at the expiration of his term of office shall take the same prior to the convening of the next succeeding Congress, and if he shall not do so within such period he shall forfeit them to his successor in office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, after line 5, to strike out:

Of the Agricultural Report, 500,000 copies; of which 110,000 shall be for the Senate, 360,000 for the House, and 30,000 for distribution by the Agricultural Department: Provided, That 75,000 copies of the Government work known as "Diseases of the Horse" be printed, 50,000 for the use of the House and 25,000 for the use of the Senate.

And insert:

The annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture shall hereafter be submitted and printed in two parts, as follows: Part 1, which shall contain purely business and executive matter which it is necessary for the Secretary to submit to the President and Congress; part 2, which shall contain such reports from the different bureaus and divisions, and such papers prepared by their special agents, accompanied by suitable illustrations as shall, in the opinion of the Secretary, be specially suited to interest and instruct the farmers of the country, and to include a general report of the operations of the department for their information. There shall be printed of part 1, 1,000 copies for the Senate, 2,000 for the House, and 3,000 copies for the Department of Agriculture; and of part 2, 100,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 200,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 30,000 for the use of the Department of Agriculture, the illustrations for the same to be executed under the supervision of the Public Printer, in accordance with directions of the Joint Committee on Printing, said illustrations to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; and the title of each of the said parts shall be such as to show that such part is complete in itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is proposed to strike out the House provision as to the Agricultural Report in the following words:

Of the Agricultural Report, 500,000 copies; of which 110,000 shall be for the Senate, 360,000 for the House, and 30,000 for distribution by the Agricultural Department: Provided, That 75,000 copies of the Government work known as "Diseases of the Horse" be printed, 50,000 copies for the use of the House and 25,000 for the use of the Senate.

The amendment proposed by the committee is a long provision.

Mr. GORMAN. It provides that the Agricultural Report shall be printed in two parts.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of that? What does the Secretary of Agriculture say about it?

Mr. GORMAN. The provision for the publication of the Agricultural Report in two parts is inserted at the request of the Secretary. It will save a great amount of printing. Of the first part, which is to contain purely business and executive matter, necessary for the Secretary to submit to the President and Congress, a small number is to be printed, while of the second part, which is for general distribution, the edition is to be larger. It is done at the suggestion of the Department; and after careful consideration by the committee they thought it a wise provision.

The House has already practically passed the same provision. The only change is as to the number of copies of the reports. It is reduced very largely. The House sent the bill here with a provision for 500,000 copies. We have cut down the number to 100,000 copies of the second part for the Senate and 200,000 copies for the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. This change will throw the matter into conference, I believe. I do not see a solitary member of the important Committee on Agriculture and Forestry here for the protection of the agricultural interest, but——

Mr. MANDERSON. So far as I am concerned I feel that the bill as it is proposed to be amended by the Senate committee will so commend itself to the other House that the chances are the amendments of the Senate will be agreed to. One embarrassment in the road of that conclusion is the cutting down of the number of Agricultural Reports. Personally I should be pleased to see some increase of the number, hoping that it might have the effect of which I speak, having the bill accepted by the House without a conference. So, if it is agreeable to my colleague on the committee, I think that on a little consultation with the gentleman who sits by his side we can probably reach a number which will be agreeable to both.

Mr. GORMAN. What number does the Senator from Nebraska suggest?

Mr. MANDERSON. I would suggest that of part 2, which will be the popular edition, we should increase the number to 400,000 copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. Put in the number provided in the bill as it passed the other House.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is 500,000 copies; a rather large number.

Mr. GORMAN. The provision as it came from the other House is 110,000 copies for the Senate and 360,000 copies for the House. That has been the rule. Does the Senator from Missouri desire that there shall be 110,000 copies for the Senate and 360,000 copies for the House?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator had better put the number just the way it was when the other House passed the bill. The matter will still be open in conference, as a matter of course.

Mr. MANDERSON. But if we put it as the other House had it there will be nothing in conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is proposed to amend the section, any way, and the number of copies will be in conference as well as anything else, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting in line 28, after the word "hundred," the words "and ten," and in line 29, after the word "Senate," by striking out "two hundred" and inserting "three hundred and sixty;" so as to read:

And of part 2, 110,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 360,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [70] 74, line 38, after the word "Industry," to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" in line 39, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "seven;" in line 40, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "fourteen," and in line 41, before the word "thousand," strike out "ten" and insert "nine;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Of the report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, 30,000 copies, of which 7,000 shall be for the Senate, 14,000 for the House, and 9,000 for distribution by the Agricultural Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 44, before the word "copies," to strike out "5,500" and insert "4,000;" and in line 46, before the word "copies," to strike out "2,500" and insert "1,000;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Of the annual report of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, 4,000 copies; 1,000 copies for the Senate, 2,000 copies for the House, and 1,000 copies for the Bureau.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 50, after the word "distribution," to insert "or sale;" in line 52, after the word "Congress," to insert "and the usual number;" in line 53, after the words "for the," to strike out "public service" and insert "Navy Department," and in line 54, after the word "following" to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is also authorized to cause additional copies of the Ephemeris, and of the Nautical Almanac extracted therefrom, to be printed for the public service and for sale to navigators and others: Provided, That all moneys received from sales of the Ephemeris and of the Nautical Almanac shall be deposited in the Treasury and placed to the credit of the general fund for public printing.

So as to make the paragraph read:

Of the Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac and of the papers supplementary thereto, 1,500 copies; 100 copies for the Senate, 400 for the House, and 1,000 for distribution or sale by the Navy Department. The 500 copies printed for Congress and the usual number shall be for the calendar year next following, and those for the Navy Department for the third year following. The Secretary of the Navy is also authorized to cause additional copies of the Ephemeris, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 83, after the word "copies," to strike out "2,000" and insert "1,500;" in line 84, after the word "Senate," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" and in line 85, before the words "for distribution," strike out "1,000" and insert "3,500;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Of the report of the Bureau of Ethnology, 8,000 copies, 1,500 for the Senate, 3,000 for the House, and 3,500 for distribution by the Bureau of Ethnology.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 107, after the word "Survey," to strike out "twelve" and insert "uniform with the preceding reports, ten;" in line 109, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "four," and in line 110, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Of the report of the Geological Survey, uniform with the preceding reports, 10,000 copies; 2,000 for the Senate, 4,000 for the House, 4,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 112, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "twenty;" in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" in line 113, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "ten;" and in line 114, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eleven" and insert "five;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Of the report of the Commissioner of Labor, 20,000 copies; 5,000 for the Senate, 10,000 for the House, and 5,000 for distribution by the Commissioner of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 115, before the word "report," to insert "annual;" in line 116, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" in line 117, after the words "House, and" strike out "two thousand;" in line 118, after the word "commission," to insert—there may be printed such number of said report and other documents incident to interstate commerce for distribution by them as they may deem expedient.

And after line 120, to strike out:

Of the reports and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission provided for in the act of March 2, 1889, 3,000 copies; 500 for the Senate, 1,000 for the House, and 1,500 for distribution by the Commission.

So as to read:

Of the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, 3,000 copies; 1,000 for the Senate, 2,000 for the House, and for the use of the Commission there may be printed such number of said report and other documents incident to interstate commerce for distribution by them as they may deem expedient.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no provision here for printing the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioner of Pensions, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Here we have bureaus and departments rendering important decisions, and we are legislating without knowing what those decisions are, or having any conception of them. I believe, although I am not sure of it, that the Interstate Commerce Commission has courteously furnished Senators with a copy of its decisions. We ought to have a provision here, and I call upon the Committee on Printing to see that it goes in the bill, requiring the Commission to send each Senator and Representative one copy of its decisions as a matter of justice and right.

Mr. GORMAN. The bill as it came from the other House, as the Senator from Missouri will see if he will look at the third paragraph on page 43, contained a provision for printing the reports and decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, provided for in the act of March 2, 1893; 3,000 copies, 500 for the Senate, 1,000 for the House, and 1,500 for distribution by the Commission.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I will state to the Senator from Missouri that the provision as to the decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission was stricken from the bill on the suggestion of the Interstate Commerce Commission because their decisions are printed in the same manner as the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, by some method of contract, as provided by law.

I think every member of Congress is usually supplied with one copy of these decisions by the Interstate Commerce Commission out of their supply. It was because of that fact that the House provision was stricken out. We have in the committee room, I know, a letter from the Interstate Commerce Commission which explains the matter quite fully. They gave such abundant reasons for striking it out that we did not hesitate to comply with their suggestion. Before the bill is disposed of we will get the letter to which I refer.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to striking out the paragraph; but I do not want the Interstate Commerce Commission to understand from the fact that it is stricken out that Senators do not desire a copy of its decision. That is the point.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think they will so understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there ought also to be some provision in the bill for copies of the decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [70] 74, line 241, to strike out "Treasury" and insert "Treasurer;" so as to read, "the report of the Treasurer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, after line 253, to insert:

Of the report of the American Historical Association, 3,000 copies: 500 for the Senate, 1,000 for the House, and 1,500 for distribution by the association and the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

And the Public Printer is further authorized and directed to furnish a complete set of the Rebellion Record to each Senator and Member of the present Congress not already by law entitled to receive the same.

And insert:

So as to make the paragraph read:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to furnish a complete set of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies to each Senator and Member of the present Congress not already entitled by law to receive the same, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 422, after the words "such incomplete sets," I move to insert "not including any to the credit of Senators."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [70] 74, line 434, after the word "Office," to insert "not exceeding five of each;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, line 470, after "the," to strike out "superintendent of documents in" and insert "chief clerk;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The Secretary of the Interior shall cause the Official Register to be edited, indexed, and published by the chief clerk of the Interior Department, on the 1st day of December following the 1st day of July above mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section [70] 74, line 538, after the word "him," to insert "if needed;" so as to make the parapraph read:

Fourth. The report of the Commissioner of Patents for the fiscal year, not exceeding 500 in number, for distribution by him; the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Patents to Congress, without the list of patents, not exceeding 1,500 in number, for distribution by him; and of the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Patents to Congress, with the list of patents, 500 copies for sale by him, if needed, and in addition thereto the usual number only shall be printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [70] 74, after the word "prescribe," in line 577, to insert the following proviso:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of section [78] 82, on page 65.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 65, section 82, I wish to call attention to the following paragraph, beginning with line 7:

The executive and miscellaneous documents and the reports of each House of Congress shall be designated as "House documents," "Senate documents," "House reports," "Senate reports," thus making two classes for each House.

There ought to be some better designation than that. These reports are to be edited by somebody, and there ought to be some system and method in their publication. Certain reports ought to be bound together and certain others bound together, and then the volume ought to be entitled, "Reports of Committee on Claims," "Reports of Committee on Military Affairs," "Reports of Committee on War Claims," "Report of Committee on Pensions," and so on, and not mix them up so that we shall not know anything at all about them. There never has been such an admixture of publications any place in the world as in our public documents. There is nothing on earth on the back of the reports to tell you what is in the volume, and you do not know whether it is the Committee on Woman's Suffrage or the Committee on Finance, or the Committee on Claims when you see the word "Report" on the back of the document. It is very little trouble to put on just a few words more so as to indicate on the back of the book what the documents are.

Mr. GORMAN. In answer to the Senator from Missouri, I will state that the very object of this provision is to cure that defect. It will cover the very trouble the Senator complains of.

Mr. COCKRELL. How can that be the case if this direction is followed: "Senate Documents," "House Documents?"

Mr. GORMAN. The title will indicate precisely what the document is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why put in a provision as to "Senate documents," "House documents," "Senate reports," and "House reports?"

Mr. MANDERSON. I think I can relieve the mind of the Senator from Missouri by making a suggestion. The object of this particular provision is simply to get rid of that which is in vogue at the present time and which is certainly very confusing. We have, for instance, in bound form Senate Executive documents, Senate Miscellaneous documents, House Executive documents, and House miscellaneous documents, and besides these Senate reports and House reports, making six different sets of books that go to make what we call the usual number which we receive at the expiration of each Congress. The purpose of this paragraph was to simplify that as much as possible and make as to the documents which pertain to the Senate but two kinds, Senate documents, which would include both the miscellaneous and the Executive, and Senate reports; and the same distinction is to apply as to the other House.

I realize the importance of having placed upon the back of every book the subject-matter that is within its lids. The difficulty, however, is that as to the House and Senate reports they are upon such numerous subjects that it is impossible to make that distinction.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are not so many committees.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is certainly impossible as to House and Senate documents. Many different documents on different subjects as they come in and are published will necessarily go to make one volume. Now, we have attempted to reach the difficulty by this provision.

Mr. COCKRELL. Allow me to interrupt the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. As to the Senate reports, all that is necessary is to have the words "Committee on Claims," "Committee on Military Affairs," "Committee on Finance," etc., designating the committees. The publication would include all the reports of the session, and that would be a very great improvement. When it comes to executive documents and miscellaneous documents, they ought to be put together and some designation put upon the volumes. If they are Senate Executive documents the words "Interior," "War," "Navy," and so on, should be put on the back—just a few words that way, to designate the volumes.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is no doubt of that; and I think we have reached it by the preceding paragraph.

Every public document—

That means everything; there can not be a more general term than that—

Every public document of sufficient size on any one subject shall be bound separately, and receive the title suggested by the subject of the volume, which shall be the chief title, and the classification of the volume shall be placed on the back at the bottom, as simply indicating its classification and not as a part of the title.

Mr. COCKRELL. But does not the next provision limit that, and make the chief title, "House documents," "Senate documents," "House reports" and "Senate reports?"

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think it limits it. I think it enlarges it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It says, "The executive and miscellaneous documents and the reports of each House of Congress shall be designated as 'House documents,' 'Senate documents,' 'House reports,' 'Senate reports.'"

Mr. MANDERSON. "Thus making two classes for each House;" but they will come under the rule which obtains as to every public document. That is provided for immediately before in the bill, and will "receive the title suggested by the subject of the volume."

Mr. COCKRELL. If they come under that provision and it is properly carried out it will be sufficient.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it does.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I fear when the Public Printer comes to take it up you will find the publications entitled "House reports," "Senate reports," and "House documents" and "Senate documents," and you will have no more idea of what is inside of the volumes than you have of what is going on in the moon.

Mr. MANDERSON. We had in contemplation the very reform the Senator desires, and if there can be any question about the wording I should be very glad if the Senator would suggest an amendment that would make it clear. It might be well to add after the word "House," in line 10, "and each volume thereof shall designate the subject treated upon," or words to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that amendment suggested?

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest language which I think will make it clear beyond a doubt. It reads:

The executive and miscellaneous documents and the reports of each House of Congress shall be designated as "House documents," "Senate documents," "House reports," "Senate reports," thus making two classes for each House.

I move to add, after the word "House:"

And each volume shall receive the title suggested by its subject-matter, clearly placed upon its back.

Mr. COCKRELL. That would be more comprehensive than what I was going to suggest. I was going to suggest "House Reports, naming the committees," and "Senate Reports, naming the committees." When you know what the committee is and know its jurisdiction you have some idea of what the reports coming from that committee contain. But the amendment suggested by the Senator from Nebraska I think will be satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "House," in line 10, page 65, insert "each volume shall receive the title suggested by its subject-matter, clearly placed upon its back."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was in section [86] 90, line 25, after the word "board," to insert "and the Secretary of the Navy may authorize the printing of the charts, maps, notices to mariners, tide tables, light lists, sailing directions, bulletins, and other special publications of the Hydrographic Office;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the printing of the notices to mariners, tide tables, coast pilots, bulletins, and other special publications of the Coast and Geodetic Survey and of the Light-House Board, and the Secretary of the Navy may authorize the printing of the charts, maps, notices to mariners, tide tables, light lists, sailing directions, bulletins, and other special publications of the Hydrographic Office in such editions as the interests of the Government and of the public may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [87] 91, line 13, after the word "resolutions," to insert, "except the State Department, to which shall be sent ten copies of bills and resolutions;" and in line 16, after the word "resolutions," to strike out "except State Department, to which shall be sent ten copies of bills and resolutions;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 91. The heads of Executive Departments, and such executive officers as are not connected with the Departments, respectively, shall cause daily examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the purpose of noting documents, reports, and other publications of interest to their Departments, and shall cause an immediate order to be sent to the Public Printer for the number of copies of such publications required for official use, not to exceed, however, the number of bureaus in the Department and divisions in the office of the head thereof. The Public Printer shall send to each Executive Department and to each executive office not connected with the Departments, as soon as printed, five copies of all bills and resolutions, except the State Department, to which shall be sent ten copies of bills and resolutions. When the head of a Department desires a greater number of any class of bills or resolutions for official use, they shall be furnished by the Public Printer on requisition promptly made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [90] 94, line 8, after the word "the," to strike out "Chief Justice" and insert "clerk;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 94. When any Department, the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims, or the Library of Congress shall require printing or binding to be done, it shall be on certificate that such work be necessary for the public service; whereupon the Public Printer shall furnish an estimate of the cost by the principal items for such printing or binding so called for, after which requisitions shall be made upon him therefor by the head of such Department, the clerk of the Supreme Court, Chief Justice of the Court of Claims, or the Librarian of Congress; and the Public Printer shall place the cost thereof to the debit of such Department in its annual appropriation for printing and binding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [93] 97, line 6, after the word "therefore," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no envelope furnished by the Government shall contain any business address or advertisement.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 97. The Postmaster-General shall contract for all envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use by his own or other Departments, and may contract for them to be plain or with such printed matter as may be prescribed by the Department making requisition therefor: Provided, That no envelope furnished by the Government shall contain any business address or advertisement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [96] 100, line 3, after the word "work," to insert "incident to stationery or blank books;" in line 9, before the word "Provided," to insert "respectively," and in line 12, after the word "entitled," to strike out "on" and insert "an;" so as to read:

SEC. 100. All future orders or requisitions for printing or binding shall be governed by the provisions of this act; and all printing, binding, and other work incident to stationery or blank books required for the Senate and House of Representatives, or the committees and officers thereof, together with the material necessary to such work, shall be furnished by the Public Printer on requisition of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively: Provided, That each Senator and Representative shall be entitled to the binding in half morocco, or material no more expensive, of but one copy of each public document to which he may be entitled, an account of which, with each Senator and Representative, shall be kept by the Secretary and Clerk, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 43, line 112, after the word "twenty," I move to insert "five," and at the end of line 113, to strike out "five" and insert "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [70] 74, on page 43, line 112, after the word "twenty," it is proposed to insert "five," and in line 113, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Of the Report of the Commissioner of Labor, 25,000 copies; 5,000 for the Senate, 10,000 for the House, and 10,000 for distribution by the Commissioner of Labor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 40, at the end of line 37, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [70] 74, page 40, line 37, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That one edition of 75,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse be printed; of which 50,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 25,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 41, line 82, after the word "Ethnology," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [70] 74, on page 41, line 82, after the word "Ethnology," it is proposed to insert "uniform with the preceding volumes of the series;" so as to read:

Of the Report of the Bureau of Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, 8,000 copies, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, line 7, page 2, after the word "Denver," it is proposed to insert "San Francisco;" so as to read:

The Joint Committee on Printing shall fix upon standards of paper for the different descriptions of public printing and binding, and the Public Printer shall, under their direction, advertise in two newspapers, published in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Louisville, Omaha, Denver, San Francisco, and Chicago, for sealed proposals to furnish the Government with paper, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. On page 22, line 5, after the words "cost of," I move to strike out "the metal and making to the Government," and insert "composition."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section [51] 53, on page 22, line 5, after the words "cost of," it is proposed to strike out "the metal and making to the Government" and insert "composition;" so as to read:

SEC. 53. The Public Printer shall sell, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, to any person or persons who may apply, additional or duplicate stereotype or electrotype plates from which any Government publication is printed, at a price not to exceed the cost of composition and 10 per cent added.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is no composition on these plates. Let me explain to the Senator that they are electrotype plates, which are taken from the type; these are duplicates of such plates; and I do not see how composition can enter into their cost.

Mr. PEFFER. I so understand, but the organized printers complain that this is taking away part of the work which they would be entitled to if the matter was set up again fresh. These plates are the stereotyped plates of matter which has once been set up by the printers in the Government Printing Office. There are publishers in other parts of the country who are anxious to procure these old plates simply because they can be had cheaply, and they are used in the reprinting of the same kind of work. The printers object to that. They say if other publishers desire to have the benefit of this matter, they ought to pay the printers for resetting it. That is the object, and the only object of the amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. The printers would not be paid. It simply would be to increase the amount that the private party would pay the Government for the electrotype plates; it would put no money in the pocket of any printer. If it had that result, I might feel in accord with the Senator.

The only purpose of this provision is where the Government has published all that it may desire for that gratuitous distribution which is our system, and some private party desires some of these plates to illustrate any work he may be printing, the Public Printer may be allowed to sell to him at the cost of the metal and the making of the duplicate electrotype plate. Of course we never part with the original, and no copyright can be obtained by the use of that plate by a private party. But I do not see exactly how we could get at the cost of the composition of an electrotype plate. There is no composition in it.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand that very well, but I do not think the Senator from Nebraska quite catches the point that is made by the printers, for whom I am speaking. There is a certain amount of printed matter set up by the printers in the Government Printing Office for the printing of certain Government works—I do not mean engravings, but printed matter.

Take, for example, say a column or a page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. That matter has all been set up once by the printers in the Government Printing Office, using the types one at a time, the spaces, quads, etc. The printers insist, after this matter has been stereotyped so that no further composition is required, if that matter is desired by private publishers, who want to sell the same matter again to the people, that in some way or other what the composition of the original matter cost ought to be taken out of the publishers, so that in one form or another the cost of the recomposition will be added in some department of the Government: that is to say, after the printers have once set up a certain amount of matter, that ought not to be sold to people on the outside at a less rate than it has cost the Government to set it up.

Having said this much, I have presented the views of the printers, and that is, of course, all I care about.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state that this section, which was in a bill similar to this which passed the Senate two years ago, came as a suggestion from the Public Printing Office, and the Public Printer, Mr. Palmer, was particular to express his desire—and he certainly would not act in contravention of the rights and privileges of any printer in this country—that the price of this matter should be "the cost of the metal and making to the Government." I do not see exactly how we could estimate the cost of the composition, for that is more than the cost of the plate.

Mr. PEFFER. I can explain that to the Senator quite readily. I do not know what the printers here are receiving for composition, but out in the part of the country where I live printers are receiving in the neighborhood of 40 cents per thousand ems. That perhaps is a fair average in daily newspaper offices. The number of ems that would be upon a page of matter would be paid for according to the thousand. Say there are 20,000 ems in a column—I do not know how much there is, but, to illustrate, say there are 20,000 ems in a column of printed matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and say that it costs 50 cents a thousand. The composition of that column, then, would cost $10. What the printer wants is, when these plates that would cover 20,000 ems are sold, the Government should receive $10 for them, instead of merely the cost of the metal, which would perhaps be about 25 cents. That is the point.

I see very well how the Government can afford to sell this metal, because it is type metal, and it is not at all a troublesome matter. To make the stereotype plate costs but little labor, and after it has been once made and the Government has had the benefit of all the impressions that are required, then some outside person wants to make a profit by printing and distributing this matter again to the people. The printer wants to keep up the wages of labor, the wages of composition. That is the point he makes, and nobody loses anything except the publisher, and he can afford it, and certainly the Government would make by the plan proposed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not particularly object to the amendment, but I want to say in regard to one suggestion made by the Senator, that nowhere in the country are printers paid so well as they are in the Public Printing Office, where they are paid by provision of law; for in this bill we simply reënact the present law. They are paid 50 cents per thousand ems; in addition to that they get thirty days' leave with pay, which is equivalent perhaps to 10 per cent additional to their pay; of course they receive their pay on all legal holidays, and they get 20 per cent extra for night work. So that, so far as printers in the Public Printing Office are concerned, they are making no particular complaint about anything that is being done by Congress. I do not know of any operatives anywhere who are so well cared for as the printers in the Public Printing Office. I wish in all private establishments they were so well cared for.

Mr. PEFFER. It is not the printers in the Public Printing Office who are complaining, but it is the printers on the outside. I have a card here from a gentleman representing Typographical Union No. 101. It is well known among Senators and Members of the House of Representatives that we can procure the printing of our speeches, or of any document of which we may want to have more numbers than we are entitled to receive under the orders of the committee, in private establishments much cheaper than we can at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator proposes to strike out, in lines 5 and 6, on page 22, the words "the metal and making to the Government" and to insert "composition." The Senator can accomplish all he wants by inserting the word "composition;" so as to read, "not to exceed the cost of composition, the metal, and making to the Government."

Mr. PEFFER. The composition has already been paid for once.

Mr. GORMAN. No.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I have no objection to it.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it read "not to exceed the cost of composition, the metal, and making to the Government."

Mr. PEFFER. Yes. Then there is another point to which I desire to call the attention of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will first be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "cost of," in line 5, of section [51] 53, it is proposed to insert "composition;" so as to read:

Not to exceed the cost of composition, the metal, and making to the Government.

Mr. PEFFER. That is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEFFER. Section 51 is a new section, and while I am not satisfied at all in my own mind as to striking out the section, yet by request of Typographical Union No. 101 I shall suggest an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that if he desires to amend that section it can be done after the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, I understand the Senator wishes to except the amendment to which he refers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to will be excepted, in the absence of objection. If there be no other exceptions, the vote will be taken in gross on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment reserved by the Senator from Kansas, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following as a new section:

SEC. 51. The Public Printer may employ such number of apprentices, not to exceed twenty-five at any one time, as in his judgment will be consistent with the economical service of the office.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand the Senator from Kansas to desire to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not desire to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, but I wish to have it stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I move to strike out that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas can reach the same point by voting to nonconcur in the amendment. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to suggest in opposition to the adoption of the amendment that the typographical unions throughout the country have regulations of their own in respect to the number of apprentices who ought to be employed. Of course Senators understand very well that in the present condition of labor all of the trades are organized in their own interest and for their own protection. They have but two objects in view. One is social and the other is business, or fiscal. Saying nothing about the social feature, the other object covers but one special point, the keeping up and maintaining of the rate of wages.

The old system of apprenticing boys and girls to trades, which was once so common and so proper and in every way so acceptable, has almost entirely passed away. It is very unusual now to hear of a boy or a girl being apprenticed to any kind of trade. There has been so much done in the way of massing labor that the unions have undertaken to regulate, as far as possible and as far as proper in their own interest, the number of apprentices who may be properly employed in the different trades. They object, as I understand, to Government offices taking any apprentices at all, or, at any rate, they maintain that the number shall be so small as not to in any way seriously affect the price of labor.

As suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], the printers in the Government establishment are receiving better wages than in any other printing establishment in the country. I think that is unquestionably true. The printers who are on the outside and who are not paid so well desire to have the section of this bill authorizing the employment of apprentices and leaving it largely within the discretion of the Public Printer stricken out, contending that it should not be a part of the law, and leaving that for private parties outside to look after.

While I have not studied the subject carefully, and while I do not base my opposition on principle, nor is it of my own motion, yet at the same time I feel authorized to present the view of the printers to oppose the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, years ago, because of the custom which obtained in all trades rather than by virtue of any permit of law, apprentices were to be found in the Government Printing Office. There was opposition of the character stated by the Senator from Kansas to the presence of apprentices in the Government Printing Office, and there being no direct warrant in the law for their employment, these young fellows, some of whom had partially learned the trade that they were seeking to obtain for themselves, were put out of office. Every Public Printer whom I have known—Mr. Rounds, Mr. Palmer, and Mr. Benedict—has felt that it would be not only advantageous to the office itself, but unquestionably of great benefit to the youth of the country if apprentices could be taken in the Government Printing Office. They are taken at the navy-yards. At the Washington navy-yard apprentices are employed. They are taken in all the arsenals of the country, and no better mechanics, no better artisans, no more inventive geniuses have been developed anywhere than in these Government shops where guns and implements of war are made.

I am aware, Mr. President, of the desire of the trades unions of the country to dictate the number of apprentices who may be taken in the different vocations. I think it is objectionable. I doubt whether the Senator from Kansas, if he had a son of special adaptability to a particular trade, would feel at all comfortable if by the order of some union that boy was not permitted to learn the trade for which nature had seemed to have made him. It is a species of tyranny which is to me of the most objectionable character. The result of it has been that many an American youth born in this country has been unable to obtain a calling or a trade for which he was specially adapted by nature, and has been driven into some other vocation, with failure certainly at the end of his efforts.

I think the Government Printing Office, which should be a model of its kind and the best in the country, if not in the world, can well afford, with its 2,500 or 3,000 employés, to take 25 boys and let them learn in that excellent place the business of printers and bookbinders. I do not see how any man will be injured by it, and I can realize that all the time perhaps 25 American boys are being greatly benefited by it. I agree with the Public Printers I have named that it is of advantage to the public service, and no man can deny the advantage to the youths themselves in the passage of this provision.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, a word or two more. The Senator from Nebraska has touched a tender spot, and so far as the principle which is down at the bottom of this proceeding is concerned he and I are in accord; but while that is true, and while as an abstract proposition I should not present the objections which I am now presenting to this section, yet while we are on the passageway from the old to the new régime, we find every day, and it is becoming more and more apparent continually, that the working people of the country are driven to extremes in order to protect themselves and maintain a fair standard of wages.

I believe in Government establishments, not only to employ the aged, to employ journeymen, to employ skilled workmen, but also to teach the youth; but, Mr. President, here we allow twenty-five persons to be selected by the Government Printer. How will these twenty-five boys be selected? They will be selected upon the recommendation of Senators, of Cabinet officers, or Members of the House of Representatives. It does not afford a chance for a boy out in the country who has no friend at court.

I will say to the Senator that five of my own boys were trained to print in my own office, and there was not one of them when he was 14 years old who could not have made his own living at the case anywhere; but when we are permitted to send out boys to the country offices, away from the influence of eminent and distinguished gentlemen, then the poor boys, the country boys, the apt boys—and there are more than twenty-five apt boys in this country—have an opportunity to get ahead. But here we make a place for twenty-five boys.

I tried two years ago to get a place for a poor boy—not my own; I have never asked a place in the Government employ for one of my own children—but a boy who carried papers for me when he was a little fellow, hardly big enough to carry twenty-five papers at one time: a little fellow whom I love as I do one of my own children. I wanted a place for him. He was a pretty good printer. He began his work in my own office, and completed his education with one of my sons. I wanted to get a place for that boy, and if my application for it was ever considered I have not known of it. There are a number of cases like that which I could mention.

During this formative process, this change from the old to the new, there is a constant conflict between employer and employé. And I will say to my distinguished neighbor from Nebraska that the lesson I am now learning from him is one more push on my back, pushing me toward free trade. Every time that a question of this kind comes up when a poor man raises his hand in order to protect his wages, we are told that the right of a man to work, the right of a boy to go into an office, is a sacred right, and I believe it is, and no man will go further than I to aid him. But what are we going to do in the mean time? Men say to us that this doctrine, true though it be, is lowering the level of their wages.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, the diffusion of knowledge is one of the highest duties of Government. I do not mean by that mere literature, mere art, reading and writing, but the diffusion of valuable knowledge, that which enables a man to earn his own bread by his own efforts, is one of the highest possible duties of Government. I am astonished to see a Senator, distinguished for his liberality, with his high regard for popular rights, seeking to deprive the Printing Office of the right to educate twenty-five men in a useful pursuit. I know that there are conflicts and controversies in labor circles, and that the labor organizations are attempting to limit the number of educated employés, so that wages may be maintained, but surely it can not be the mission of Government to make men ignorant in order that the intelligent may earn more than they would if the whole mass were enlightened.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me a question at that point?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. PEFFER. It will perhaps assist us in arriving at a correct conclusion. Does the Senator from Illinois believe that it is any part of the Government's duty to educate men to be printers or mechanics or men who wish to engage in any other line of work?

Mr. PALMER. I have no more doubt that it is the duty of Government, whenever a proper occasion presents itself, to give to men a mechanical education than I have of the right to establish and maintain common schools.

Mr. PEFFER. I agree with the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. Now, what is this proposition? It is that the Public Printer shall allow twenty-five boys to be educated in the art preservative of all arts. It is said that that is opposed by those who are now in possession of that art; that they desire to limit the number of those who are to be thus educated. Can that be consistent with public policy? Can it be desirable that the number of educated men shall be reduced everywhere, that the number of printers, the number of mechanics, in all the various arts shall be reduced in pursuance of a policy of the Government until the number becomes so small that those who understand those arts may receive adequate wages for their services? Can that be a proper public policy?

Mr. PEFFER. I will say to the Senator from Illinois, in answer to his question, that if he will join me in asking to have all customs legislation abolished so that there will be no protective tariffs, or anything of the kind to assist in keeping up prices, I will unite with him in asking that in every public office in the country apprentices shall be employed.

Mr. PALMER. I would find no difficulty in joining with the Senator as to the first branch of the proposition, because I believe that protection is one of the veriest and most shameful of all humbugs. It never did any good to anybody, except capitalists who may have been able to avail themselves of it.

I can join him there, but I want to go beyond that. The boys of this country are objects of universal interest at least. I see boys on the street here, and I should not think of denying a little beggar boy, healthy, industrious, as honest as his opportunities will allow, intelligent and bright-eyed, a chance, or even twenty-five chances, to learn a trade.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to interrupt him? I know what a good heart the Senator has, and how kind he is. I submit to him this simple proposition, that out of one thousand of the class of boys he sees in the city of Washington he can not get one into the Government Printing Office.

Mr. PALMER. I was told by a theologian not long ago that only about one human soul out of a million would be saved, but I always thought I should like to be that one out of the million.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator does not believe it, does he?

Mr. PALMER. Suppose you can give but twenty-five boys an opportunity to learn a trade; that is better than nothing.

Mr. PEFFER. It will not be the poor boys, though.

Mr. PALMER. Perhaps not. I know I went personally to Mr. Johnson, the Superintendent of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and told him of a boy as good as there is in the city, an industrious, upright, hard-working boy, who wanted to be an apprentice. That boy is an apprentice now in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. I do not suppose all children can get such chances, but twenty-five of them will; and God bless the twenty-five. It is that much done for the improvement and elevation of humanity. Twenty-five boys can be taught a trade, and it is that much to help the mass to progress. My friend, the Senator from Kansas, and I differ so widely on this point, although we agree upon very many subjects, that I must express my astonishment that he should stand up here and ask to strike out of the bill an opportunity for twenty-five boys to learn a trade. He has some boys, and so have I, and, as I say, I am astonished that he should seek to deprive twenty-five boys of the chance to learn to be good printers. I hope my friend, the Senator from Kansas, will apologize, and that he will support the proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the bill by inserting in line 5, section 47, after the words "Memorial Day," the words "Labor's Holiday." I use the language which I find in a law that passed Congress and was approved June 28, 1894, which provides "that the first Monday of September in each year, being the day celebrated and known as Labor's Holiday, is hereby made a legal holiday."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish simply to make an inquiry. I presume there is some good reason for a provision found in section 45. In that section a provision has been inserted by the Senate concerning the chief clerk, the foreman of printing, and the foreman of binding, making the appointment of those officers subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing, and likewise providing that they shall not be removed except upon the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. That goes further than the civil-service law even, in a department of the Government which is not under the civil-service law at all.

The Public Printer, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, can not, under the proposed law, appoint his chief clerk, his foreman of printing, or his foreman of binding unless the Joint Committee on Printing permit him to do so; and a new Public Printer can not remove them, however obnoxious they may be, without the consent of the committee. It strikes me that is a departure which is so widely different from the former custom as to the Printing Office, as I have before said even going beyond any provision of the civil-service law, that I should like to know what abuse has existed or what reason there is, if there is any good reason, for putting this very extraordinary provision in the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I can state the motive which prompted one member of the committee to take such action. I really would have been very glad to have seen the chief clerk, the foreman of printing, and the foreman of binding appointed by the usual appointing power and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. They are very important officials in the Public Printing Office. It was thought best, however, not to do that, but to make at least that little check, which would count, by causing the appointment of these men to be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing.

As the Senator from New Hampshire is well aware, there is in the Government Printing Office as the foreman of printing a man who has had very great experience and has rendered very many years of the most acceptable service in that capacity. I have no idea that any Public Printer would, for mere political reasons, attempt to remove that very competent official, so long as he would be willing to stay, but still it is well enough to guard against any such action.

The chief clerk of the Printing Office by the proposed act will for the first time be charged with the duties of Public Printer in the event of the absence or sickness of the Public Printer. As the law is now, if the Public Printer should be taken sick or incapacitated in any way there would be no one to perform the duties of his office, and yet there must come from him, for the running of that office, his official approval of many things and his signature to many papers. It was thought well that the chief clerk should be charged with the duties of the Public Printer when the Public Printer is sick, incapacitated, or away.

So the bill provides that in the event of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Public Printer the chief clerk shall perform the duties of that office until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness ceases. The President may, however, direct any other officer of the Government, whose appointment is vested in him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to perform those duties until a successor is appointed, or the sickness or absence of the Public Printer ceases. But a vacancy occasioned by death or resignation must not be temporarily so filled for a longer period than ten days, and no temporary appointment or assignment of another officer to perform the duties of Public Printer is to be made except to fill a vacancy happening during a recess of the Senate.

With this new and important function added to the duties of chief clerk, the Joint Committee on Printing thought it well to have his original appointment and his retention subject to its approval. I have no doubt that no matter how the Joint Committee on Printing may be composed as to its politics, the appointment of the person named for chief clerk by the Public Printer, upon a showing by him that he is a practical printer and versed in the art of bookbinding, will be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing. It is simply legislation in the way of an additional safeguard to the original appointment and subsequent retention in office of proper and competent men.

Mr. GALLINGER. It strikes me that the Senator from Nebraska in the statement just made, that the joint committee would always agree to the appointment of the chief clerk desired by the Public Printer, gives away the necessity for the proposed change in the law. I am not going to be captious about it. I understand the amendment has been adopted. I was absent when it was adopted, and I simply rose to make an inquiry, because it seems to me it is an innovation or a change in a very remarkable direction. Under the civil-service law men are appointed through the instrumentality of the Civil Service Commission, but they are dismissed without asking anybody's consent.

The Cabinet officers have their chief clerks, and they dismiss them when they get ready to dismiss them and appoint others, which I think they ought to have a right to do. It strikes me as a very extraordinary provision that when the Public Printer, a man holding that very high office, one almost equal to a Cabinet office, certainly charged with greater responsibility than some Cabinet officers, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, comes to appoint a chief clerk he must come to Congress and ask the consent of the Joint Committee on Printing to his appointment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think my friend overlooks the fact that the Public Printing Office is really different from any Executive Department of the Government. Its former name was the Congressional Printing Office, and while its title has been changed to the Public Printing Office, it has ever continued to be the creature of Congress. We dictate as to what shall be the extent of its appropriations; we dictate by concurrent resolutions of Congress, which do not receive the sanction of the President of the United States, as to what printing shall be done, and from the beginning Congress has insisted that the Government Printing Office shall be held as much as possible directly under its hands. So it occupies a very different position from that of any of the Executive Departments. It is almost as much a part of the running of the Government by Congressional action as is the folding room or the document room. It is our creature; and I think that in itself is one of the reasons why the Congress of the United States, either as a body or through one of its trusted committees, should have the exercise of this power.

I can assure the Senator from New Hampshire that there is no desire on the part of any member of the Joint Committee on Printing to enlarge its responsibilities and its powers. We have simply thought that this would be a desirable thing to do, not for the purpose of helping any particular man, but for the purpose of keeping the Public Printing Office where it should be, directly under the supervision and control of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I have served my purpose in calling attention to this matter. I believe it is bad legislation, and I trust it will be stricken out in conference. I think we could much more properly protect the Public Printer by providing that he shall not be removed without the consent of the confirming power than to take subordinate officers and so legislate as to them that they can not be removed except with the concurrence of a committee of Congress. As I said before, it is most extraordinary legislation. I venture to say that there can be found no similar instance on the statute books of the United States, but if the Senate or Congress wishes to so legislate, I have no objection.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. GORMAN, Mr. RANSOM, and Mr. MANDERSON were appointed.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to add only a word. The bill which the Senate has just passed is, in my judgment, one of the most important bills that has passed Congress at any time. It is the work principally of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], the former chairman of the Committee on Printing, and the chairman of the Committee on Printing of the other House, who have spent the better part of two years in the preparation of this measure and the study of the whole question. It is the culmination of the laws regulating this department, which spends three or four million dollars a year, and I look forward to it as a means of great relief to the Treasury and of great benefit generally. It will stop many of the abuses which have grown up. While I have reported it, being now chairman of the Committee on Printing of the Senate, I desire here publicly to give those two gentlemen special credit for the preparation of the measure.

And provided further, That no judgment shall be rendered against the Government unless it shall affirmatively appear from the evidence adduced that such collision was the result of negligence on the part of the officers in command of said vessel of war.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON AND GREAT FALLS RAILWAY.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is a bill here of very great importance to the District which I should like to have passed. It is House bill 6777, to amend the charter of the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6777) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway," which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, line 9, after the words "with the," to strike out the words "word 'boundary,'" and insert the words "words 'is to run,'" and in line 10, after the word "line," to strike out "fifty-five," and insert "forty-nine;" so as to read:

That the act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company," approved July 23, A. D. 1892, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all that part of the first section of said act commencing with the word "beginning," in line 17, and ending with the words "is to run," in line 49, and inserting in lieu thereof the following.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1 to strike out from line 10 to line 74, inclusive, in the following words:

First. Beginning at a point on Prospect street, between Thirty-fourth and Thirty-sixth streets; thence westerly along Prospect street to or near Thirty-eighth street northwest; thence westerly and northerly, on land to be acquired, except on street crossings, by said company to and across Foxhall road; thence to and across the New Cut road; thence westerly along and adjacent to the Conduit road to and across V street northwest, on "Palisades of the Potomac" subdivision; thence westerly over and at right angles across the Conduit road strip of land to Cottrell Place.

Second. Said company is hereby authorized and required to construct and operate a branch line to the proposed union passenger station near and east of the north end of the Aqueduct Bridge, whenever legislation shall authorize the establishment of such a union station.

Third. And after the word "road," in line 85 of said section 1, insert the following: "except as herein provided."

Fourth. And after the word "company," in line 90 of said section 1, insert the words "and the company's provision for crossing its railway over the valley above culvert numbered 20 of the Washington Aqueduct shall be such as never to impair or obstruct the water way to and of said culvert, and the plans of said crossing and the plan for crossing the road over the Conduit road shall, before construction, be submitted to the Secretary of War and have his approval in writing.

Fifth. And after the word "State," in line 124 of said section 1, strike out "and the said Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway may cross the projection of the United States land at a point on the south side of the Conduit road just west of the distributing reservoir."

Sixth. And after the word "Columbia," in line 145 of said section 1, insert the following: "or across the Conduit road;" and after the word "any," in said line, strike out the word "other."

Seventh. And after the word "Aqueduct," in line 186 of said section 1, insert the following: "and the crossing of the road over the Conduit road shall be made to conform to all changes of grade of this road."

Eighth. And after the word "road," in line 197 of said section 1, insert the following words: "and if the Secretary of War shall deem it necessary, and shall so direct, every car shall, before crossing, be brought to a complete stop."

Ninth. And after the word "earnings," in line 13 of section 7, insert the words "within said District."

Tenth. The said company shall furnish and maintain passenger houses as required by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall place first-class cars on said railway, with all modern improvements, for the convenience, comfort, and safety of passengers, and shall run cars as often as public convenience may require. The time-table shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and said Commissioners may make such regulations as to rate of speed, mode of use of tracks, and removal of ice and snow from off the tracks in the public streets as in their judgment the interest and convenience of the public may require. Should the said company, its servants or agents, willfully or negligently violate such ordinances or regulations, said company shall be liable to the District of Columbia for a fine not exceeding $50, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the Commissioners of said District.

And insert:

Beginning at a passenger station to be erected and maintained on the square bounded by Prospect, Thirty-fifth, M, and Thirty-sixth streets, northwest, as hereinafter provided for; thence westerly along Prospect street to or near Thirty-eighth street northwest; thence westerly and northerly on land to be acquired, except at street crossings, by said company to and across the Foxhall road; thence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 6, insert the following as section 5:

SEC. 5. That the act to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, approved July 5, 1894, is hereby amended by striking out the words "thence southwesterly on Louisiana avenue to a point to be located by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, east of Seventh street northwest, returning by the same route to said point of beginning," therein, and inserting in place thereof the following: "beginning at the intersection of Fifth street and Louisiana avenue; thence by single track along Louisiana avenue to Sixth street west; thence south on Sixth street to B street northwest; thence west on B street north to Ninth street west; thence north on Ninth street to D street northwest; thence east on D street to the point of beginning, at the intersection of Fifth street and Louisiana avenue; also on Delaware avenue a branch line over the tracks of the Metropolitan Railway Company to the terminus on the Capitol grounds, which extension shall be in lieu of the extension already authorized on New Jersey avenue south of C street."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator desire his amendment to come in?

Mr. MCMILLAN. After section 4. This is to be section 5, and the next section will be numbered 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

ESTATE OF JOHN C. HOWE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to call up a bill which it will only take a minute or two to pass, but I will not interfere if the Senator from Missouri desires an executive session.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the bill?

Mr. HOAR. It is Senate bill 1154. Order of business 496. A similar bill has passed the Senate several times. It is to carry out a judgment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will withdraw my motion for a few minutes. I promised the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] that I would yield to him and I will yield to two or three other Senators; but we must have an executive session.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1154) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, $66,907, the same being compensation in full for the use by the United States, to wit, in 66,907,313 cup anvil cartridges, of the invention secured to John C. Howe and his assigns by letters patent of the United States, issued to him August 16, 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. This is a bill for the payment to the legal representatives of John C. Howe, for the use of cartridges by the United States during the entire term of the letters patent of the invention. The owner of the patent in the first place sued the United States in the circuit court in Connecticut and got judgment to this amount. Then the matter was sent to the Court of Claims by the Senate, and the Court of Claims have made a report which finds the full amount due. A similar bill has passed the Senate two or three times before and there is a favorable report upon it in the other House.

The bill was reported without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS G. CARY.

Mr. VILAS. From the Committee on Pensions I beg to make a favorable report on the bill (S. 1948) granting a pension to Augustus G. Cary, and I ask for the present consideration of the bill. A similar bill was passed by the Senate in the last Congress.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Augustus G. Cary, late first lieutenant, United States Revenue Marine, and to pay him a pension out of the naval pension fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill 2173, a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that if the bill brings out any debate, of course I shall not press it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 26, after the word "reserve," to strike out "east of the said range two west of the Indian meridian" and insert "not included in the first division;" so as to make the paragraph read:

The second division shall consist of all that part of the Chickasaw Indian Reserve, not included in the first division, and the place of holding court therein shall be at Ardmore.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. In line 79, section 1, after the word "parties," I move to strike out "except as hereinafter provided;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That the judicial tribunals of the Indian nations shall retain jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases arising in the country in which members of the nation by nativity or adoption shall be the only parties, and as to all such cases the law of the State of Arkansas extended over and put in force in said Indian Territory by said acts shall not apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, to strike out section 8, in the following words:

SEC. 8. That any Indian who may be indicted or put on trial in the Indian courts of the Indian Territory, may, on the filing of his affidavit with the clerk of such court stating that he fears he will not receive a fair and impartial trial in said court, have such indictment transferred to the United States court nearest to the Indian court in which such indictment was found, and on the filing of such affidavit the court or judge thereof in which such indictment was found or shall be prosecuted, shall, without delay, and without further proceedings in such case, transmit the said indictment and a record of all proceedings thereon to the United States court herein designated, and on the filing of such indictment the court finding such indictment shall have no further jurisdiction of such indictment or of the person of the defendant, and such indictment or prosecution shall be tried and finally disposed of in the said United States courts, and all judgments rendered in such case and all penalties imposed shall be executed by the authorities of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 9, in the following words:

SEC. 9. That in any suit or proceedings in the Indian courts of the Indian Territory between Indians involving a sum of $500 or upward, or involving the title, right of possession, or occupation of real estate, either party to such suit may, on filing an affidavit that he fears he will not receive a fair and impartial trial in said court, have the case transferred to the United States court nearest to the Indian court in which such case is pending, and the court or the judge where said case is pending shall, on the filing of such affidavit, without delay and without further proceedings in such case, transmit the pleadings in said cause together with a transcript of all the proceedings therein to the United States court as heretofore indicated, and the jurisdiction of said Indian court shall cease with the filing of such affidavit, and such cause shall be tried and disposed of in said United States court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAMING OF MINOR STREETS AND ALLEYS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to secure uniformity in the names of minor streets of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in order to secure uniformity in the names of the minor streets and alleys of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, to change the name of any minor street or alley.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

METHODS OF ACCOUNTING IN TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the bill (H. R. 6948) to improve the methods of accounting in the Department of the Treasury, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed, the provisions of that bill having been incorporated in the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. PALMER. I had desired to inquire of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who seems to have charge of the appropriation bills, whether it would be convenient that the Senate should to-morrow, after the morning hour, devote a half hour to the disposition of pension bills favorably reported; but, as he is not present at this moment, I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning hour to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consider uncontested pension bills.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After sixteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 31, 1894, at 12 o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 30, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. W. E. PARSON, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. About a week ago I introduced a resolution, in view of the fact that both Houses seemed to be hitched on the settlement of the tariff question, asking the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to report a bill providing for the free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1; and also a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, directing that committee to report some one or all of the measures before them looking to a change in the present financial system of the nation. I have heard nothing from either of these bills, and I ask now if it is not in order to move that the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be requested to report at once that resolution in order that something may be done, or that we may begin the work at least of lightening the burdens and complying with the demands of the people so often made to Congress.

The SPEAKER. No question of privilege is presented by the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I am not stating a question of privilege, but am making a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not within the province of the House to direct this committee to make this report, or is it in the power of the committee to pigeonhole such matters at their own will, so that matters of interest to the masses may be smothered?

The SPEAKER. No question of privilege is presented. The gentleman will be in order.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I only submit the parliamentary inquiry and not privilege whether it is right for the committee to pigeonhole such matters.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House inform the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I have read the rules, and can find no guidance on this subject, but suppose that the people's demands are always out of order in the House.

FEDERAL COURTS, NEBRASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 108) to fix the times and places for holding the Federal courts in the State and district of Nebraska.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska to submit a motion in reference to these amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 10, strike out "third" and insert "first;" in the same line strike out "September" and insert "October;" so that it will read: "At the city of Lincoln on the third Monday of January and the first Monday in October in each year."

Mr. BRYAN. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary I will make a brief statement in regard to this matter.

This bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. MERCER] and refers merely to the time of holding the court in our State. In the House an amendment was added to the bill giving a second term of the court at Lincoln, Nebr., and fixing the date at the third Monday in September. In the Senate this was amended by making it the first Monday in October, which amendment is agreed to by my colleague [Mr. MERCER] and myself, and I now move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

GRACELAND CEMETERY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2245) to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take that bill up and put it upon its passage, stating that its exact counterpart has been reported to the House by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and is upon the Calendar. There has not been a murmur of opposition to the bill by the people anywhere in the District, and the trustees representing the cemetery, as well as the people, desire this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill. The Clerk will report it, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its its consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act the charter of the Graceland Cemetery Association of the District of Columbia shall cease and determine except as to the members of the board of officers of said association, who, and their successors in office, are hereby continued as such corporation for the purposes hereinafter stated, with power, by unanimous vote, to fill any vacancies in said board until the distribution hereinafter directed shall have been effected; and after the said date of passage it shall be unlawful to inter any bodies in the cemetery known as the Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia; and any person or persons violating this act, or aiding or abetting its violation, shall be subject to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, to be collected as other fines are collected in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the said board of officers of the Graceland Cemetery Association of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed, under such regulations as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may prescribe, to transfer the bodies interred in said cemetery to some other suitable public cemetery or cemeteries within the District of Columbia at the expense of said Graceland Cemetery Association. And said board of officers be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to subdivide, sell, and convey in fee simple the whole or any part of the tract of land known as Graceland Cemetery and the buildings thereon, and apply the proceeds of such sales, together with all other moneys and assets of said association, as hereinafter directed. After paying all obligations and liabilities of said association, including a compensation to said board of officers of 5 per cent of the gross amount aforesaid, together with reasonable attorneys' fees and other necessary expenses in the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by this act, the said board of officers shall distribute the remainder of such amount among the owners of lots in said burial ground, as such ownership may be evidenced by certificates of ownership of record on the books of said association. Said distribution shall be pro rata according as the certificate value of each lot is to the total certificate value of all the lots in said cemetery. In cases where said board of officers shall be in doubt as to the ownership of any lot or of any claim against said association, they shall pay into the registry of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, for distribution, the amount to which the owner or owners of such lot shall be entitled to as aforesaid, or the amount of such claim, as the case may be. When all the net proceeds as aforesaid shall have been distributed as hereinbefore prescribed, the said board of officers shall file an affidavit to that effect, with their accounts and vouchers, in the office of the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, unless there is a desire for some further explanation, I will ask for a vote. There is no opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HEARD] to consider this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WHEELER of Alabama, until August 7.

HENRY W. LEE.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5363) for the relief of Henry W. Lee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARNES] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into and determine what services were rendered by Henry W. Lee, now of Stevens Point, in the State of Wisconsin, to the Winnebago Indians, or to any bands or families thereof; whether such services were rendered at the request of or under any agreement with or acceptance of such Indians; whether such services were of utility and value to such Indians and deserving of compensation, and to fix upon the proper measure of the value of the same, not exceeding $10,000 and over and above any sums of money which may have been paid to the said Lee on account thereof; and if he shall determine that the said Lee is justly and equitably entitled to any such sum or compensation as he shall so fix, then to deduct the same from the accounts to be paid and distributed to the stray bands of Winnebagoes in Wisconsin, or to such of them as he shall find were justly answerable, in such yearly installments or portions as he shall think fit, and to pay the same to said Lee, in full discharge of all his claims, notwithstanding that a formal contract was never made in accordance with the statute in such cases made and provided: Provided, That said stray bands, or a majority of the heads of families thereof, shall give their consent to such payment in such manner as the Secretary shall direct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. REED. I should like to inquire what the bill is about?

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Lee is an attorney living at Stevens Point, Wis. Some years ago he was engaged by the Winnebago Indians, a stray band of Indians in that State, to protect their interests here at Washington, and also at Madison in Wisconsin. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the then Secretary of the Interior [Mr. TELLER] recognized that Mr. Lee had performed and was performing valuable services, but there was no authority of law to pay him for those services.

Now, this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain what if anything is due to Mr. Lee for those services, and shall state and ascertain his account; that it shall not be paid unless the Indians themselves consent to it, under such rules as the Secretary shall prescribe, and that then it shall only be paid out of the Indians' funds, and not out of the funds of the General Government. It seems to me that this is a very fair and proper bill, and that the rights of the Indians, of the Government, and of Mr. Lee, and of all parties are amply protected.

Mr. COOMBS. By what committee is this reported?

Mr. BARNES. The Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COOMBS. Is there a unanimous report?

Mr. BARNES. Yes.

Mr. COOMBS. How much does it involve?

Mr. BARNES. Not to exceed $10,000. The account shall be stated by the Secretary of the Interior and be ascertained, but it can not exceed $10,000.

Mr. COOMBS. Over and above what has already been paid, as I understand?

Mr. BARNES. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I judge from the reading of the bill that something has been paid heretofore?

Mr. BARNES. I believe so.

Mr. PAYNE. How was that obtained?

Mr. BARNES. I can not state that. My colleague [Mr. LYNCH] has some information about that, I think.

Mr. LYNCH. The money was paid voluntarily by the Indians from time to time. This bill passed the Senate in the last Congress. It was reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs in this Congress. Its passage was simply prevented by want of consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent for consideration of this bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I have just come in and I should like to know what tribe of Indians is referred to.

Mr. BARNES. A stray band of Winnebagoes, located near Stevens Point, Wis.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNES, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INTERSTATE FAIR AT TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7753) to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the interstate fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the interstate fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties.

Whereas there will be held in the city of Tacoma and county of Pierce, State of Washington, from and after ——, 1894, an exposition to be known as the Interstate Fair, in which foreign nations and foreign exhibitors have been invited and have agreed to participate: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign nations for the sole purpose of exhibition at said exposition, upon which there shall be a tariff or custom duty, shall be admitted free of assessment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and all articles which have been imported from foreign countries and which have been on exhibition at the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, or which are now on exhibition at the California Midwinter International Exposition at San Francisco, upon which there is a tariff or customs duty and which have been heretofore admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, be removed to the city of Tacoma, in the State of Washington, for the sole purpose of exhibition at said interstate fair.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful at any time during such exposition to sell for delivery at the close of the exposition any of the goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on its grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation; and all penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced and applied against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of any illegal sale or withdrawal thereof.

SEC. 3. That all of the provisions of public resolution No. 30, entitled "Joint resolution authorizing foreign exhibitors at the World's Columbian Exposition to bring to this country foreign laborers from their respective countries for the purpose of preparing for and making their exhibits," approved August 5, 1892, are hereby extended to and made applicable to said interstate fair, to the same extent as if said interstate fair was therein specifically named.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. There are amendments recommended, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In the preamble insert, after the word "after" "August 1."
In line 3 strike out "nations" and insert "countries."
In line 6 strike out "assessment" and insert "payment."
In line 10, after the word "how" insert "or have been."
In line 10, section 2, strike out the word "importation" and insert "sale."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DOOLITTLE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS PERDIDO RIVER, FLORIDA.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7827) to authorize a bridge across the Perdido River, between the States of Florida and Alabama.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county authorities of the counties of Escambia, Fla., and Baldwin, Ala., be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, in accordance with plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, an iron or wooden bridge for free use by the public at or near Holman's ferry, across the Perdido River, between the States of Alabama and Florida, and to jointly maintain and regulate the same under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon between the said counties.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

After line 10 add the following:
"SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be begun within one year and completed within three years from the date of the approval of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida to consider this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MALLORY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

E. DOUGLASS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1319) for the relief of E. Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Ebenezer Douglass, late Indian agent at White Earth Indian Agency, in the State of Minnesota, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $566.66, for money paid out and services performed by said Douglass, at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in closing the accounts with said agency.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. ALLEN. I would like to hear the report on that bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. There are a great number of letters accompanying the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would say to the House that the bill has been passed by the Senate and carefully considered by the Committee on Claims. It has also been looked over thoroughly by members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I think there is no objection to its passage. It has been considered in the House and in the Senate, and was unanimously agreed to by the House committee. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS], who has examined the bill, to make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. COOMBS. Well, I have read the report through. I wish to say that I had objections to the bill when it came up the other day. Having read the report through very carefully, I can not press those objections now. I think it is a just claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. ALLEN. Was this man an Indian agent when he did this work?

Mr. COOMBS. He was the Indian agent, and was discharged suddenly, and then the Commissioner of Indian Affairs directed him to go on and settle up the books, which he did, employing a clerk; and this is for his services at the regular rate that he used to receive as an employé, and for the clerk hire.

Mr. FLETCHER. After he had been removed.

Mr. COOMBS. And also his clerk at the same as he had been receiving, for two months and a half.

Mr. DOCKERY. For settling up his own books?

Mr. COOMBS. He was discharged suddenly.

Mr. SAYERS. Do you think that is right?

Mr. COOMBS. I do.

Mr. LYNCH. When was that?

Mr. FLETCHER. In 1877.

Mr. LYNCH. You say he was two months and a half in settling up his own books?

Mr. FLETCHER. He was ordered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior to do the work.

Mr. LYNCH. And you say it took him two and a half months to settle up his books, which he should have been able to settle at any day.

Mr. FLETCHER. He had to do a great deal of traveling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LYNCH. I object.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am very much obliged to you.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

REFUND OF FINES TO SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6502) to refund certain fines to the State of South Carolina.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the treasurer of the State of South Carolina, the sum of $1,500, the same being the amount of the fines imposed upon W. W. Riser, sheriff of Newberry County, State of South Carolina; M. B. Gains, sheriff of Anderson County, S. C., and M. S. Tyler, late sheriff of Aiken County, in said State of South Carolina, in the case of Ex parte D. H. Chamberlain in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, and which said sum was paid out of moneys belonging to the State of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BURROWS. Is this a bill to refund fines imposed upon some people in South Carolina?

Mr. LATIMER. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no use in wasting time upon such a bill as that. I object.

HEIRS OF A. LAWRENCE FOSTER.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3619) for the relief of the heirs of A. Lawrence Foster, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to try and determine, according to law, the case of the estate of A. Lawrence Foster, deceased, late of the county of Fairfax, in the State of Virginia, against the United States, for the sum of $28,840, for the use and occupancy of the farm and lands belonging to the decedent, in the county of Fairfax, State of Virginia, by the armies of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and also as reimbursement for property used and destroyed upon and taken from said farm and lands by the military forces of the United States during the said war of the rebellion, during the years from 1861 to 1865 inclusive: Provided, That upon said trial the plea of the statute of limitations shall not be available to the United States against the claim of said estate.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in explanation of the bill; or if it is preferred, I will have the report read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, this is too important a bill to be considered in this way, and I hope the gentleman will let it go over until members can have a chance to examine it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri object to the request for the consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to let it go over until it can be examined. The bill carries $28,000.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this bill is simply to remove the statute of limitations which has run against the claim, the illness of the claimant, softening of the brain, having rendered him mentally incapable of prosecuting it. All that is sought by this bill is to remove the statute of limitation and let the case go to the Court of Claims just as it would have gone if the man had been competent mentally to prosecute it. The claim was filed with the Secretary of War, but, by some inadvertence, it was not submitted to the proper tribunal, and all that this bill proposes is to let it go to the court with the same effect as if mental incapacity had not prevented its prosecution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

JAMES FAY.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7683) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of James Fay, late a landsman and fireman on board the United States steamship Shamrock, of the North Atlantic Squadron, and grant him an honorable discharge to date from August 16, 1865: Provided, That no pension, back pay, bounty, or any other allowance shall be paid to said Fay by virtue of this act.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to amend the bill. It appears that there never has been a charge of desertion entered against this man, and I wish to amend the bill so as to conform to the fact. The case is very simple, and I do not think anyone can object to the bill. This man was put on the naval records as "not reporting." The vessel Shamrock at the end of the war went to Philadelphia and was out of commission. The crew were given leave to report at any naval station they chose. This young man chose Brooklyn. He had two weeks' leave of absence, and at the end of that time he reported at the Brooklyn navy-yard, but there was no order there for him. In further explanation of the case, I ask the Clerk to read the brief statement in small print at the bottom of the first page of the report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the statement.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. COOMBS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a statement.

Mr. KILGORE. I object to that bill, but I will withdraw the demand for the regular order for a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

CHARLES T. RUSSELL.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the passage of the Senate bill which I send to the desk, an act (S. 1999) for the relief of Charles T. Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles T. Russell, of Connecticut, late consul at Liverpool, England, $3,100, being the sum actually and necessarily expended by him in the shipping department of that office.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to apply the amount named in this bill to cancel and offset any claim, or so much thereof as the United States may have against the said Charles T. Russell, for any indebtedness due from him upon an unsettled account while consul as aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to hear some explanation of the bill.

Mr. REED. I will state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that Mr. Russell was consul at Liverpool for four years. Prior to his becoming consul there was always an allowance made of $2,000 per annum for the purpose for which he made this expenditure, but at that time Congress had ceased to make appropriation for that purpose, which purpose was the discharge and shipment of American seamen in the port of Liverpool. Since the expiration of Mr. Russell's term of office the consul has been furnished with a clerk at $2,000 a year, who performs that work. Mr. Russell is now settling his accounts, and as he has made actual expenditure of $3,100, he desires to be reimbursed by the United States.

Mr. SAYERS. That expenditure was for the employment of a clerk?

Mr. REED. For the employment of a clerk and for the expenses of shipment and discharge of American seamen.

Mr. COX. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maine what committee has passed upon this case?

Mr. REED. The Committee on Claims have passed on it, and the bill has been passed by the Senate. It was reported favorably at the last meeting of the Committee on Claims. It is a case that comes to me through the hands of the counsel of the bondsmen, and both the parties concerned are Democratic brethren, to whom I desire to be just and charitable.

Mr. COX. I would like to see the report in this case.

Mr. LOUD. I will state to the gentleman that this case came before our committee sometime ago, and I raised objection to its consideration until evidence could be secured from the State Department setting forth the facts. Such a letter came from that Department some ten days ago, and on last Friday week the bill was reported.

Mr. COX. As I remember the matter now, the claim was held up in our committee until a statement could be obtained from the State Department——

Mr. LOUD. It was held up on my suggestion.

Mr. COX. And my colleague on the committee [Mr. LOUD] obtained that statement, and then the claim was favorably reported. Am I correct as to that?

Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. REED, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LIGHTS ON FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7383) relating to lights on fishing vessels.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 10 of the act approved March 3, 1885, entitled "An act to adopt the revised international regulations for preventing collisions at sea," so far as said article relates to lights for fishing vessels, is hereby reënacted and continued in force, anything in the act approved May 28, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act approved August 19, 1890, entitled 'An act to adopt regulations for preventing collisions at sea,'" to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ROBBINS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7383) regulating lights on fishing vessels, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

This bill merely continues in force the provisions of existing law relating to lights on fishing vessels, as established by the act of March 3, 1885, which enacted international rules to prevent collisions at sea. During the present session of Congress a bill was passed, and has been approved by the President, preliminary to the promulgation by the maritime nations of the revised international rules of the road, prepared by the Washington International Marine Conference.

While enacting the revised international rules relating to collisions generally, it is not desirable to change the law in regard to lights on fishing vessels, and it was understood that the provisions of article 10, act of March 3, 1885, in regard to fishing vessels, should remain in force; yet, as the question was raised during the discussion of the bill relating to collisions at sea, and the fear expressed that the passage of the act of May 28, 1894, would repeal article 10 of the act of March 3, 1885, an understanding was reached to the effect that a separate act should be reported simply continuing in force the provisions of article 10, act of March 3, 1885, relating to fishing vessels.

This bill will remove any doubt on this point which might possibly be raised in judicial interpretation of the rules of the road. It provides that the law relating to fishing vessels shall remain as it is at present after the new regulations go into effect. Therefore, your committee recommend its passage by the House.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TRACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER SOUTH CANADIAN RIVER, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. FLYNN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 320) authorizing the Purcell Bridge and Transfer Company to construct and maintain a bridge over the South Canadian River at or within 1 mile of the town of Lexington, county of Cleveland, Territory of Oklahoma.

The bill was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCDOWELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. BOATNER, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that Report No. 181, on the bill (H. R. 4563) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, be reprinted.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for the regular order.

LAND DONATION FOR FREE SCHOOLS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. MCRAE presented the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6080) granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2; and the House agree to the same.

THO. C. MCRAE,
D. D. HARE,
J. W. MOON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

JNO. MARTIN,
A. J. MCLAURIN,
JOSEPH M. CAREY,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The reservation which by this bill is proposed to be granted to Oklahoma City, in trust for the use and benefit of its public free schools, was established by Executive order of April 20, 1889, for use of Fort Reno. This was two days before the opening of Oklahoma to settlement. The reservation was relinquished by the War Department September 23, 1892, by virtue of Executive order of that date, and placed under control of the Interior Department for disposal under the act of July 5, 1884 (23 United States Statute, 103), or as may be otherwise provided by law.

The War Department disposed of all the public buildings and improvements on the land. The following applications to make entry of the tract were presented at the Oklahoma City land office and rejected for the reason that said land was not open to settlement, being a military reservation and not subject to homestead entry: No. 1270, of Benjamin S. Miller, October 14, 1892; No. 1271, of John A. Blackburn, October 15, 1892; No. 1274, of Henry W. Scott, October 17, 1892; No. 1279, of John A. Blackburn, October 24, 1892; No. 1282, of John Carson, October 25, 1892; ——, of C. R. Jones, December 13, 1892. Appeals have been taken from the rejection of the application of Miller, Jones, and Blackburn.

On the 12th of April, 1893, the mayor of Oklahoma City made application to enter said tract for cemetery and park purposes under the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stats., 502), which was rejected.

The Interior Department by letters have repeatedly held, in communications to committees of the House, that no vested rights attached by reason of these applications, and the land is public and subject to disposal by Congress.

The Senate recedes from its amendments, and if this report is adopted it will pass the bill as originally passed by the House.

THOS. C. MCRAE.
D. D. HARE.
J. W. MOON.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MCRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COOMBS. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to withdraw the call for the regular order until I can again present the bill which I hold in my hand.

Mr. SAYERS. I withdraw the call for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order can not be withdrawn in favor of a particular individual.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well, then; I do not withdraw it.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees for reports.

ARBITRATION BETWEEN EMPLOYÉS AND EMPLOYERS.

Mr. ERDMAN, from the Committee on Labor, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7727) to create a national board for the arbitration of controversies between employés and their employers; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of committees for reports was concluded, no further reports being presented.

RECOGNITION OF REPUBLIC OF HAWAII.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I send up to the desk a resolution for which I desire to ask present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think this involves a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

1. That the United States of America congratulates the people of the Hawaiian Islands on their just and peaceful assumption of the powers, duties, and responsibilities of self-government as indicated by their recent adoption of a republican form of government.

2. That the Republic of Hawaii is entitled to exercise and enjoy international comity and the benefits of all rights, privileges, and advantages under existing treaties that were concluded between the United States of America and the late Kingdom of Hawaii.

3. That the Republic of Hawaii is hereby recognized by the United States of America as a free, sovereign, and independent republic, and the President of the United States shall give proper notice of the recognition to the President of the Republic of Hawaii.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make the point that this resolution should go the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point that this is not a privileged resolution.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to state that this resolution, with the exception of a single word, is a verbatim copy of a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The resolution is his production, with the exception that a single word has been substituted, the word "Hawaii."

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. What resolution does the gentleman from Maine refer to?

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is the text of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky himself, on the 27th day of January, 1890, asking the House to pass a resolution recognizing the Republic of Brazil.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that under the peculiar circumstances in which we find ourselves as related to the Government and people of Hawaii, this resolution should involve a question of privilege. I believe from all that has gone before, from information embodied in executive communications to this body and to the Senate, and from the resolutions adopted by the Senate and in this House, that the general public understanding is, and has been, that for some time past the question of our relations to the Hawaiian people and their Government has been referred to the action of Congress. So far as I am informed the position most recently assumed by the Executive Department is that of deference to the initiative of the House of Representatives and the Senate in regard to this important subject.

Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of common knowledge that the people of Hawaii established and proclaimed a republican form of government on the 4th day of July, instant; that in doing so this great act of the assumption of republican sovereignty was accompanied by every possible manifestation of regard for and sympathy with the people and Government of the United States, and that from the beginning a most earnest desire has been manifested for the most intimate and cordial relations between the two Governments.

I understand further, Mr. Speaker, that it has been the uniform policy of the United States to be prompt and earnest in encouraging and recognizing all movements tending towards the establishment of free republican governments, in whatever parts of the world they may be. I understand this to have been the settled policy of the United States from the foundation of this Republic. I need not enforce upon the mind of the House the fact, it seems to me, that the establishment of a republic in the Hawaiian Islands is an event that under all the circumstances appeals to the sympathy of the people of the United States with the most peculiar and extraordinary strength.

I desire, however, to call attention to the fact that during last winter, at the time that the provisional government of Hawaii celebrated the anniversary of the deposition of monarchical rule in that country, there was a most remarkable and to my mind a lamentable neglect of international courtesy on the part of the representatives of the Government of the United States, neither our minister nor our naval representative at that point manifesting the customary cordial sympathy and interest in an event which could not have been otherwise than most important, and of the deepest interest to the people and Government of the United States. And the very fact that our representatives on that occasion failed to manifest any sympathy on the part of this Government with the tentative and successful movement of that people for a freer form of government, seems to me to add to the force of our present obligation to welcome the new republic to a place amongst the national republican systems of the world.

We have been informed through the public press that there is on the way from Hawaii to Washington a delegation claiming to be representative of the defunct monarchy, who were originally reported to propose making certain claims before this Government for restoration of the throne; but the latest public report we have is that even these adherents of the deposed Queen have so far recognized the logic of events and the manifest destiny of that people, that they have changed their purpose from demanding further recognition of the Queen and her government to a purpose to appeal to the President and the Government of the United States in behalf of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to this Government. While I confidently hope to see that result accomplished in the future, in view of these facts and reasons, Mr. Speaker, for the adoption of the resolution I have presented, and as it is known to everybody, and to none more fully than our own people, that the Hawaiian Government has been proclaimed as a republic; that it has joined the great galaxy of the free-governing nations of the world; that its new government has been inaugurated under American auspices, and that this whole movement is but the culmination of beneficent American influence in the direction of the great interests which this country must necessarily feel in American control of that commanding outpost of the Pacific Ocean, so valuable to our future prosperity, it is a matter of high and grave import that the House of Representatives of the United States, voicing the universal sentiment of the American people—for there is no dissent, so far as I am able to ascertain, from one end of the country to the other—should promptly express the sympathy of all the people by adopting this resolution so admirably constructed by the gentleman from Kentucky to suit the case of Brazil a few years ago, and use the same form now to welcome the government of the Republic at Hawaii, by a full recognition on the part of the great representative republican government of the world, the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the resolution presents a question of privilege. It will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The Chair does not regard the resolution as presenting a question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I trust it will meet with prompt and favorable action at the hands of its distinguished author, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who prepared the resolution, of which it is a copy.

Mr. McCREARY. Has the gentleman from Maine any reason to doubt that the committee will act promptly and report to the House on any matter presented to it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, Mr. Speaker, in answer to that amiable inquiry, I will say simply that I do not want to throw any possible shadow over my fervent hopes for the immediate future by alluding to any of the deferred hopes concerning the action of the committee in the past.

The SPEAKER. This matter has passed from the consideration of the House. The morning hour begins at seven minutes past 1 o'clock.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

HOUSE BILLS LAID ON THE TABLE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to ask that several House bills be laid on the table, the bill H. R. 5447, because a Senate bill of similar import has passed the House; the bill H. R. 2371, because another bill relating to the same subject and of the same general character has passed the House; and also the bill H. R. 6037, because the matter in this bill was incorporated in the appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the numbers of these bills, and then, without objection, they will lie upon the table, as requested by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill H. R. 6037, a bill H. R. 2371, a bill H. R. 5447.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs recommend that these bills lie upon the table. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

GEORGE B. COSBY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to call up the bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of George B. Cosby.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and I will state that if the explanation I make is not satisfactory, I shall not press the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in settling the accounts of George B. Cosby, late a first lieutenant in the Second Cavalry, United States Army, are hereby authorized and directed to credit him with the sum of $1,358, being the amount of his official draft in favor of John T. Shaaf, late a lieutenant in the United States Army, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, La., on or about March 31, 1860, said check not having been honored or paid for the want of funds, occasioned by payment of forged checks by said assistant treasurer, for which said George B. Cosby was in no way responsible.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Lieut. Cosby was appointed quartermaster at Fort Mason, Texas, in 1860. When he took possession of that office he found as the clerk there a detailed enlisted man named Pirola. Very soon after Lieut. Cosby took charge in 1860 Pirola, the clerk, forged the name of Lieut. Cosby to two checks. These checks were written by Pirola, and he did not even attempt to imitate the handwriting of Lieut. Cosby, but signed his name. These checks went into the subtreasury and were paid. Shortly after that Lieut. Cosby's attention was called to the fact, and he proved conclusively in the district or circuit court—I am not sure which—that he was in nowise to blame, that this was a forgery, and so clumsy a forgery that the officer in the United States Treasury who had been receiving some of the checks signed by Lieut. Cosby ought to have known that it was not Cosby's signature.

The pay of Lieut. Cosby was not retained, but this matter still hangs over him, and of course, as such a case is never barred by the statute, he desires to be relieved from this responsibility.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to see a copy of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The number of the bill is 6921, and the number of the report is 1268.

Mr. SAYERS. Was this before the war?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It was before the war. Here are letters from Gen. J. E. Johnston, Quartermaster-General, exonerating Lieut. Cosby entirely. I will read one letter:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 8th instant. Your statement shows clearly that you were in no degree responsible for the assistant treasurer's refusal to pay your check to Lieut. Shaaf.

That was a check that was drawn by Lieut. Cosby afterwards, he knowing that there ought to be money enough in the subtreasury to his credit to pay it, which check was refused payment because of these two forged checks having been paid, by which means the money was drawn out:

I must acknowledge that you have a right to take exception to the second paragraph of my letter of the 21st ultimo It does not, however, as you interpret it, charge you with intentional wrong, but carelessness. Nevertheless, it was improper.

That is, it was improper to charge him even with carelessness:

It is my duty to apologize for it, and express my regret that it was written.

J. E. JOHNSTON,
Quartermaster-General.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if any suit has been instituted upon this?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not know of any suit having been instituted.

Mr. CAMINETTI. There is a suit pending now, and the fact that he has to go back to 1860 to get the evidence makes it a hard matter for him to meet.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I had no information through the regular channels that a suit was pending. This man Pirola afterwards deserted, stealing a lot of property, besides forging these checks. The property which he stole was not charged up against the commissary officer in charge at that time, and neither should these checks be charged against Lieut. Cosby, who did not appoint this man, and who was not responsible for him at all. He was in the service as an enlisted man, and employed as a clerk in the quartermaster's office when Lieut. Cosby took possession of it. I trust my explanation is satisfactory to the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. What was the amount; and what do you say the object of the bill is?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This gentleman is just seeking to be relieved from a charge that stands against him in the books, that someone forged and drew from the Treasury Department, the amount being $1,358.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MEDAL OF HONOR.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up House Resolution No. 199, relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863. I make this request because it has not yet been reported. It involves no appropriation, and would take but a moment to consider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which the Clerk will report, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 199) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863.

Resolved, etc., That any person who has been, or may hereafter be, awarded the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863, respectively, may wear, in lieu of said medal, a bowknot of ribbon of a pattern and under regulations to be prescribed by the President of the United States.

Resolved, That the wearing of said medal or ribbon by any other than the persons above specified shall be deemed a misdemeanor and subject, on conviction, to a penalty of $100.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

MILITARY ROAD FROM EL PASO TO FORT BLISS, TEX.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7419) for the construction of a military road from the city of El Paso to Fort Bliss, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the military reservation known as "Old Fort Bliss" shall have been sold by virtue of an act approved March 1, 1890, so much of the receipts therefrom as may be necessary, not to exceed $4,000, are hereby appropriated to the construction of a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex., said money to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill as in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman, as I could not catch the reading of the bill, if there is a provision in that bill that this road is to be completed out of the proceeds of the sale of the old fort?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is exactly the provision of the bill. It makes provision to build a military road, which is absolutely necessary, and in which there is no real estate speculation. It is to build a road from the city of El Paso to new Fort Bliss, and the money to do this work is to come out of the proceeds of the sale of the old fort, which has been ordered by Congress heretofore.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I understood the gentleman to say there was no real estate speculation in this bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. Then it is a unique claim you set up for the bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is unique, because of the location; and because——

Mr. KILGORE. I suppose the land is too poor to speculate in.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not want to say anything against your State, or any part of it.

Mr. KILGORE. If this is one of those cases in which there is no real estate speculation, then it is sui generis, there is no other like it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky. It seems to furnish a precedent which ought not to be established, then.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered and under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NEW MEXICO MOUNTED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now call up the bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Capt. Ceran St. Vrain's company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the officers and enlisted men of the company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers which served under Capt. Ceran St. Vrain, and was present at the battles of La Cañada, January 24, 1847, El Embudo, January 29, 1847, and Taos, February 4, 1847, in the Territory of New Mexico, shall be placed on the same footing in regard to pay, allowances, emoluments, bounty, and pension, as volunteers regularly mustered into the United States service.

SEC. 2. That in auditing and paying the foregoing accounts, the copy of muster roll of said company now on file in the War Department, dated Santa Fe, N. Mex., February 20, 1847, which shows the company organized at Santa Fe, N. Mex., January 23, 1847, and discharged at that place February 20, 1847, and which bears the indorsement of the secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, dated October 10, 1857, certifying that it is a true copy of the original roll of said company, shall be the data to guide the accounting officers; and said claims shall, when audited, be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The title was again reported.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask that the bill be read again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask the Clerk to read the first part of the report as part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Capt. Ceran St. Vrain's Company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

The records of the War Department show that this company was organized by Capt. Ceran St. Vrain, of Santa Fe, N. Mex., on January 23, 1847, and remained in service until February 20, 1847. It was organized under the authority of the colonel commanding the United States forces in New Mexico. At this time Gen. Kearney had taken possession of New Mexico in the name of the United States, but an insurrection against the authority of the United States occurred in the Taos district. The governor of the Territory and a large number of the inhabitants of the town of Taos who sympathized with the United States were killed. The colonel then in command of the army at Santa Fe proceeded with all his available men to suppress this insurrection.

As an aid in this object, he authorized the organization of a company of volunteers by Capt. Ceran St. Vrain, and they performed valuable service in suppressing the outbreak. They were never recognized by the War Department as in the United States service, on account of want of authority in the then commanding colonel to order their organization and muster. The necessity for their organization existed and he could not have obtained authority from the War Department in time to make them available in the suppression of said insurrection.

The meritorious character of their services is fully set forth in the annexed report of the War Department. As they rendered service of great value under the only possible authority they should be recognized as in the United States service. The Secretary of War recommends the granting of relief. The report of the War Department is appended, with a roster of the company.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, unless some gentleman wishes a further explanation than is contained in the report——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to know one or two things about this claim. Why was not this claim paid twenty-five, thirty, or forty years ago?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico to explain the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to ask another thing. When in the history of this Government did we put men on the pension roll who were nominally in the service twenty days?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does not put them on the pension roll. It simply provides pay for the time they served.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not so understand it. I have sent for a copy of the bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It puts them on the same footing with other men who were in the same service for twenty days.

Mr. LOUD. If they were in the service twenty days they ought to have a pension.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Speaker, these men were mustered into the service of the United States Goverment on the 23d of January, 1847, during the Mexican war. They served in the Territory of New Mexico for about twenty-eight days.

In that time they were engaged in five or six bloody contests, in which six members of the company were killed and twenty-two wounded. There are only three surviving members of the company in New Mexico and Arizona, and this organization having done such valiant service not only for New Mexico but for the Government of the United States, I think it is only just that Congress should give relief to the few surviving members of it. The original muster roll was forwarded to the War Department in 1847, but at that time much of the vast region between this capital and New Mexico was occupied not only by hostile Indians but in some parts by Mexican troops engaged in war against the United States, and the muster roll was lost in transit and never reached the Department. A certified copy of it, however, has been forwarded and is now in possession of the War Department, and this bill provides that that certified copy shall be recognized as the basis of the payments to be made to those and the heirs of those who rendered this service.

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman stated awhile ago that there were only three survivors of this company, and now he states also that their heirs will come in under this bill. Why is that?

Mr. JOSEPH. Well, I recognize that they have some claim for pensions.

Mr. LOUD. There could not be over $10 apiece coming to these men, and if there are only three of them surviving, it seems to me that this is rather a meager claim to bring before Congress.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I confess I am very much surprised at the presentation of such a claim as this, and, unless this amendment be adopted, I do not think the bill ought to pass.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Line 10, insert after the word "pay," the word "and."
Also in lines 10 and 11 strike out "emoluments, bounty and pension."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that amendment will be to leave these soldiers to receive any pay or allowances that may be due to them under the army regulations, and certainly the advocates of the bill ought not to desire to go beyond that.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, let the bill be read as it would stand if the amendment were adopted.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill with the proposed amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I yield further time to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH].

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is a great injustice to deprive these few surviving veterans of the Mexican war of the pensions to which I think they are entitled. There are only three of them living now in New Mexico and Arizona, and I feel confident that there are not more than six altogether who would be beneficiaries of this bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why are they not pensioned under the general law?

Mr. JOSEPH. Because they served only twenty-eight days.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then, instead of making this exception, why not amend the general law in this respect so as to apply generally?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why put these men on a better footing than men who volunteered from the States, without the special incentive of protecting their own territory, and served fifty-nine days and yet do not receive pensions?

Mr. JOSEPH. Because, as the commander of the Army reports, this company did specially meritorious service.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, they all did meritorious service.

Mr. JOSEPH. This company was in six bloody engagements, lost six killed outright, and had twenty-two wounded.

Mr. DOCKERY. That seems to be a good reason for making an exception.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, this House on last Friday evening passed a bill allowing a pension to a man who had served sixteen days in some imaginary Indian war, and another allowing a pension to a man who had served, or imagined he had served, eighteen days, and I think this is as meritorious as those bills were.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the language of the bill does not give these men any advantage over other soldiers of that war. It proposes to put them "on the same footing in regard to pay allowances, emoluments, bounty, and pension as volunteers regularly mustered into the United States service." Certainly that does not give them any advantage over others.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that the bill as it stands contains an element of uncertainty. Why mention bounty at all if they are not entitled to bounty? Why mention pensions at all if they are not entitled to pensions? Why talk about allowances—allowances to a soldier who was mustered in for a few days only and then mustered out? I do not think this bill ought to pass at all; but if it is amended as it ought to be, I will make no further objection to it.

Mr. JOSEPH. Let me say for the information of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], that the United States Government so far recognized the services of these Mexican veterans, as to allow them land grants under the law passed in March, 1854—the land grants allowed to other Mexican soldiers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then they have been getting along pretty well for so short a service.

Mr. JOSEPH. But the Secretary of War has thought that they are entitled to even more than that for the valiant and meritorious services rendered by them during that war.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, there are only a few of these survivors, as my friend from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] has stated.

Mr. JOSEPH. About three, to my certain knowledge.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There are but very few of them. One of them—I believe a very worthy old man—lives in my Territory. Opposition to a bill of this kind certainly does not come with a good grace from those who are so swift ordinarily to recognize services given in defense of the country and who pass here claim after claim for the benefit of men who never saw a battle line; and I am not denouncing those bills, because those men would have seen battle probably if they had had an opportunity. Here, however, are men who went into the service as soldiers, but on account of difficulties, which have been explained by the gentleman from New Mexico, were prevented from appearing regularly on the list of Mexican volunteers, as I understand.

Mr. JOSEPH. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And in that time these soldiers fought four or five battles—fought as gallantly, with as great a loss in killed and wounded, as any body of men of similar numbers who were ever engaged in any war; yet it is urged that these men, because they did not serve sixty days, should not receive pensions now in their old age, when they have but few years to live. I hope that my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who is always so generous in these matters—who is so generous always for the right—will withdraw his objection to this measure.

Mr. JOSEPH. In addition to what has been said, allow me to state that each of these three surviving veterans is now over 75 years of age.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They are very old men—every one of them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Let the gentlemen who want to extend this favor to three surviving soldiers bring in a pension for these three men by name and I will vote for it, if the circumstances are as stated here. But I have become just a little tired of having bill after bill of a most meritorious character for the relief of the soldiers of the war of the rebellion defeated constantly upon the point of a quorum, while it seems as if the wit of man was being exhausted in hunting about for somebody who was not engaged in that war to be made the recipient of pensions. Why pass a general law in this case that will lead to the introduction of all sorts of names and controversies in the War Department? If it is only three men whom you really intend to provide for, why not introduce a private bill for those three, and see if it will not pass without any opposition?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, on Friday last we rejected virtually the claim of the State of Florida for $568,000 based on substantially the same condition of facts as that revealed in the application now before the House. We are asked to give this company of volunteers or the survivors of them, and the next of kin of those who are dead, pay, bounty, pension, and allowances for twenty-eight days' service in the year 1847. And it is claimed that these men should be paid because they are now old men and worthy citizens. If we once adopt that theory as the basis of allowing claims of this sort, we shall have claims presented here on no more substantial grounds from every Territory and very many of the States of the Union.

One principle alone should be applied to all these cases; that is the test of mustering in. When the soldiers who may have formed any organization of volunteers have been mustered into the service of the United States, then their claim should be recognized as valid, but not otherwise. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that volunteers in any State or Territory of the Union ought to be willing to serve for twenty-eight days at the request of the governor without any pay except what they may receive from the Territory or State. They should not come to the Federal Congress thirty or forty years later for bounty and pension and allowances.

I am unable to see how any man can vote for this bill and then vote against the claim of the State of Florida which was pending before this House on Friday last. The amount involved makes no difference. That this bill should involve merely the pay of these three men for thirty days is, of course, impossible. There is something back of this proposition. It involves the pay, pension, bounty, and allowances, not only of these three men, but of forty, fifty, or one hundred men—all those who formed this company in the year 1847—and their next of kin. The report fails to disclose the number of men interested in this claim or the amount of money which we shall be called upon to pay. And it seems to me that is one objection to the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH. Here is a list of the members contained in the report, which I hand the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, according to this list it seems to me that there are forty or fifty persons involved in this claim; that is to say, the three survivors, and the legal representatives of those who are dead. That being the number you can well imagine to how many dollars it will amount, when the events date back to 1847, and we have a criterion in the case of Florida, where we found the names of 400 men, aggregating a claim against the Government at this time of something over $550,000. In the same proportion it is fair to assume that this claim will eventually reach fifty, sixty, or seventy thousand dollars.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no logical distinction can be made in regard to this character of claims. If we pay one, we must pay all. But they should not be paid. The true test of the acceptance of the service by the Government and the Secretary of War should be applied in all cases; and bear in mind that in this instance the report of the majority of the committee shows that they were never mustered into the service of the United States. I do not see how it can be supported and passed by this House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, the question, I believe, is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. Does the gentleman insist on that provision?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I will state that the committee will accept the amendment, and let the vote be taken on it at once.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to have the amendment reported.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are no other amendments, and I move that the bill be reported to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. SAYERS. Before that I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the concluding paragraph of the bill:

> And said claims shall, when audited, be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

Now, there is no appropriation——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I am willing to strike out that provision if the gentleman thinks proper.

Mr. SAYERS. Let it be stricken out, and whatever money is due will be appropriated.

Mr. JOSEPH. I accept that.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to strike out in the second section of the bill all after the word "officers," in the twelfth line.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The committee accept that amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out in line 12, section 2, after the word "officers," the following words: "And said claim shall, when audited, be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly arose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 962, had directed him to report same to the House with sundry amendments and that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered; under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THORWALD OLSEN.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call up House bill 4012, for the relief of Thorwald Olsen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the discharge from the military service of Commissary-Sergeant Thorwald Olsen, dated October 12, 1891, and to cancel the enlistment of the said Olsen, dated January 18, 1892; and the said Olsen shall be considered now to be, and to have been, continuously in the service under his enlistment of July 16, 1890, as if said discharge of October 12, 1891, and enlistment of January 18, 1892, had never taken place; and the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to adjust and pay the accounts for pay and allowances of the said Olsen in accordance with the object and intent of this act.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask for the reading of the report.

This bill, I will state, should be considered in Committee of the Whole, but I think when the report is read that question can be disposed of without difficulty.

The report (by Mr. OUTHWAITE) was read, as follows:

> The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4012) for the relief of Thorwald Olsen, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report in support of the recommendation that the bill do pass:
> This soldier entered the United States service in 1867 as a private, and in 1877 was promoted to commissary-sergeant. He performed the duties to the entire satisfaction of the Department until 1891, when, by reason of a chain of depressing circumstances, he was dismissed the service on the ground that he was mentally deranged. He was serving in the department of Texas, and was ordered to St. Francis Barracks, Fla., where he reported June 5, 1891.
> He was not in good health at the time of this transfer, and the change of climate, together with the necessary use of sulphur water, made matters worse, yet knowing and appreciating what military orders meant, in spite of his sickness and physical exhaustion, he continued to perform the duties imposed in a hot, ill-ventilated office, often working late into the night. To cure this physical exhaustion he took large doses of quinine, from the effects of which he became delirious and while in that condition he wounded himself with an ice pick. When he recovered from the wound he learned that he was ordered to the Government Asylum for Insane at Washington, D. C. He entered this institution on September 30, 1891, and was discharged therefrom on December 2, 1891, being confined in the asylum in all sixty-two days. During this period, to wit, on the 12th of October, 1891, he was discharged from the service by reason of mental disability.
> By permission from proper authority and after repeated critical medical examination he was reenlisted January 18, 1892, appointed sergeant the same day, and was reappointed commissary sergeant on February 25, 1892, but as this was a new enlistment under the law, he was deprived of his $5 per month enlistment service pay. He is at present performing the duties of commissary sergeant, and your committee believe that he is entitled to the recognition set out in the bill for his relief. On October 14, 1893, the Secretary of War transmitted a letter to the Speaker of the House of Representatives calling the attention to the injustice worked upon this unfortunate officer and recommended that a bill be passed granting this relief.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not think the bill needs any further explanation, after the reading of this report. [After a pause.] There seems to be no objection to it, and I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JAMES T. PEALE.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 6672) to place James T. Peale on the retired list of the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. That bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill, with Mr. COOMBS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in view of his long and faithful services as major and brevet lieutenant-colonel in the Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry during the late war, and captain Second United States Cavalry on the frontier since the war, and because of disease incurred in the service and line of his duty, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint James T. Peale to the position of captain (mounted) in the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of that grade, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby suspended for this purpose only.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6672) to place James T. Peale on the retired list of the United States Army, having considered the same, respectfully report:

Your committee agree with the reports made by the Senate and House Committees on Military Affairs in the Fifty-first Congress, which report is herewith submitted, and recommend the passage of the bill.

* * * * * * * *

James T. Peale entered the volunteer service of the United States March 12, 1862, as second lieutenant of Company D, Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry; was promoted captain same company and regiment June 5, 1863; promoted major same regiment September 9, 1864; and brevetted lieutenant-colonel United States Volunteers March 13, 1865, "for gallant and meritorious services during the war, and particularly in the engagement at Wyatt's farm;" he was taken prisoner September 29, 1864, in action; confined in "Libby," "Salisbury," and "Danville" prisons until February 22, 1865. He was honorably mustered out and discharged the service July 1, 1865.

He entered the regular service February 23, 1866, as second lieutenant in the Second United States Cavalry; was commissioned a first lieutenant July 28, 1866, and a captain of the same regiment March 3, 1875, and was dismissed from the service by sentence of a general court-martial December 20, 1880. His active service in the Army of the United States extended over a period of nearly eighteen years.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, that is all of the report that I care to have read now. This officer was dismissed by sentence of court-martial in 1880. The charges were preferred by Col. Miles. The court-martial was convened and its sentence rendered. Gen. Miles has in the last paragraph of that report stated his present conviction and judgment. I ask the Clerk to read the last paragraph of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
Fort Leavenworth, Kans., October 7, 1885.

DEAR SIR: James T. Peale, of Pennsylvania, late a captain Second Cavalry, United States Army, having been dismissed from the service December 20, 1880, on charges preferred by me, involving an undue use of intoxicating liquors, is desirous of being restored to the Army. I would beg to say, in his behalf, that I am in possession of satisfactory evidence that since his dismissal from the service his conduct and habits as to sobriety have been above reproach. Capt. Peale, while in the service, aside from the fault named, had a good record during the civil war and on the frontier, proving himself a gallant, efficient, and meritorious officer.

In view of all these facts, should the President deem this a case where clemency could be properly exercised, there are several ways in which the effect of a dishonorable dismissal from the Army could be overcome or discontinued. He could be appointed a second lieutenant in the Army; he could, by special act of Congress, be restored to the rank of captain, and assigned to the first vacancy; or he could, by special act, be placed upon the retired list of the Army, with the rank of captain.

I recommend him to favorable consideration.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
NELSON A. MILES,
Brigadier-General, United States Army.

The CHAIRMAN. But three minutes of the morning hour remain.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOMBS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6672) to place James T. Peale on the retired list of the United States Army, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Rules for immediate consideration:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately after the adoption of this order the House proceed to the consideration of House bill 119, to protect public forest reservations; that said bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole; that at the hour of 4 o'clock this day (unless sooner disposed of) the previous question be considered as ordered on pending amendments and on said bill to its final passage, when, without delay or other motion, the vote be taken on said bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 23.

Mr. LOUD, Mr. BOEN, and Mr. PICKLER made the point of no quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] and the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair appoint the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] to be one of the tellers in my place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, at the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], will appoint the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] as one of the tellers.

The question was taken on agreeing to the resolution; and there were—yeas 117, nays 54, answered "present" 7, reported present by the tellers 4, not voting 169; as follows:

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired, and I want to be put down as "present" in order to make a quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from nay to yea. I also ask that my colleague, Mr. LUCAS, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EVERETT). The Clerk will report the names of those noted by the tellers as present and not voting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRODERICK, Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Mr. COGSWELL, Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky, Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, let us have the roll recapitulated.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to a mistake. I notice I am recorded as voting in the affirmative. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. STOCKDALE, and did not vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be recorded as "present."

Mr. LOUD. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the tellers reported Mr. BRODERICK as "present," and he made up one of the seven that were first reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 116; the nays 52; answered "present," 6; reported as present by the tellers, 4. A quorum is present, and the motion is carried.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the rule was adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order that that is not in order. In the first place, what does the record show as to how the gentleman voted?

Mr. PICKLER. I voted in the affirmative.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PICKLER. I move that the House take a recess until 4 o'clock.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order.

Mr. PICKLER. Why is it not in order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Because this is a motion on a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PICKLER. But your rule is not adopted.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The rule is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 6.

Mr. PICKLER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PICKLER. Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That motion is not in order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I would like to have the Chair make the ruling. The gentleman from Ohio has not the right to make a statement as to whether any business is in order or not. If the Chair is going to make any ruling he will do so, but not the gentleman from Ohio. If the gentleman from Ohio will take the chair he can make the ruling.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Washington is not authorized to state what my rights and privileges are. I make the point that the motion is not in order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The point I make is, that when you make that point of order you can not also make the ruling for the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule that one motion to adjourn is in order.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington and Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 53.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand tellers.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. The yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this shows how much more important it is to have a decision from the Chair than it is to have a decision by the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON].

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 78, nays 120, not voting 153; as follows:

Mr. PICKLER (during the roll call). Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that there are no tellers at the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. EVERETT). On a motion to adjourn a quorum is not required, so tellers are unnecessary.

Mr. PICKLER. I beg the Chair's pardon, but the rule makes no exception. It requires that when the yeas and nays are taken tellers shall be appointed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point made by the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I call the Chair's attention to the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair had already called his own attention to it. [Laughter.]

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The following additional pairs were announced for the rest of this day:

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois with Mr. PHILLIPS.

Mr. WISE with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] to reconsider the vote by which the order reported from the Committee on Rules was adopted. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 18, answered "present" 4, not voting 218; as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending that an appropriation of $35,000 be made to meet the expenses during the current fiscal year for which no provision was made in the act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, approved March 15, 1893; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. I will state that exactly the same bill with a very slight modification passed the Senate a few days ago. I think the shortest way to close up the matter is to pass the House bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the Senate request the return from the House of Representatives of the bill (S. 2151) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, approved April 24, 1894.

On pages 1 and 2, lines 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, to strike out "and that the sum of $42,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act."

And to amend the title by striking out "reimburse" and inserting "audit for."

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendments of the House of Representatives and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. PALMER were appointed.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PALMER. That bill is a very important one, and I should be glad to have it read again so that I may understand it.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. LODGE. That seems to be a very important bill, and I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. COKE. The object of the bill is simply to allow the States to collect their taxes on property which is placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal courts. When property is placed in the hands of a receiver by the Federal courts it is held to be withdrawn from any power whatever on the part of the State to levy taxes on it or to collect those already assessed. The purpose of the bill is to give the States the power to collect the taxes which have been assessed upon such property.

The great number of railroad and other corporations whose property is now being placed in the hands of receivers makes such a bill as this absolutely necessary in order that the revenues of the States may suffer no diminution on that account. The bill was considered by the Judiciary Committee and unanimously agreed to and directed to be reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was in the committee yesterday when a report was authorized to be made upon the bill, but I desire to look at it further, and I should like to have it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. COKE. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I desire to ask the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] to consent that the bill for which he asked consideration just now, in regard to interference with the collection of State taxes, may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. There is no doubt that course will save time in the passage of the bill, and save the time of the Senate, as I understand several members of the committee have not considered the bill.

Mr. COKE. I will consent to the recommittal of the bill provided it can be acted upon within a reasonable time.

Mr. HOAR. I consent to that. I am in favor of the object of the bill, and I think the Senator from Texas will see that it requires an amendment, which probably can be better made in committee than on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COKE. The committee has given the matter very full examination heretofore, but I will consent that the bill may be recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT 3 PER CENT GREENBACK CERTIFICATES.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1896) to provide for the payment of the 3 per cent greenback certificates of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a statement of the amount of these securities which are proposed to be paid by the Government.

Mr. MARTIN. I understand they amount to about $19,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that all?

Mr. MARTIN. I think that is all. This bill was thoroughly considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is an old matter which ought to have been closed up long since. There can be no objection to the bill, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia unanimously reported in favor of its passage in order to dispose of the matter as a finality.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 2, line 5, after the word "bonds," to strike out "from their date to the approval of this act and shall be computed as if evidenced by coupons," and insert "from the date of issue to the date of maturity thereof and with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of their maturity to the date of the approval of this act;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to redeem and pay all the remaining outstanding bonds of the District of Columbia, known as the "greenback 3 per cent bonds," with interest, as specified in said bonds, from the date of issue to the date of maturity thereof and with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of their maturity to the date of the approval of this act. The Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed to sell sufficient amount of the unissued 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia to cover the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND FOR GRAVEL PIT AND RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7451) to authorize the entry of land for gravel pits and reservoir purposes and authorizing the grant of right of way for pipe lines; which was laid aside temporarily yesterday in order that it might be printed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "land," to insert "not occupied and which is subject to entry under the land laws of the United States;" and in line 17, after the word "Secretary," to strike out "Provided further, That the land or right of way shall not be within the limits of any park, forest, military, or Indian reservation, or the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall, in his discretion, find it necessary for the use of any railway company, whose line is located and operated through the public domain, that said company should acquire title to some part of such public lands for gravel pits or the construction of reservoirs and the right of way for pipe lines to connect the same with such railway, the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to sell to said company a sufficient area of such land not occupied and which is subject to entry under the land laws of the United States not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract and to issue patents therefor, and to issue permits for such pipe lines: Provided, That such company shall pay therefor not less than the appraised value of such lands, the appraisers thereof, three in number, to be appointed by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use, at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not less than $2 per acre: Provided, That when lands so purchased are within a mining district such lands shall be considered mineral lands, and the patent to such lands shall not authorize the purchaser to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, which reservation shall be inserted in such patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall insert in the patent a provision that unless the land so sold shall, within three years from the date of entry, be utilized for reservoir or water-storage purposes, that such land shall revert to the United States. That the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of the water for irrigation or other purposes under authority of the respective States or Territories, and this provision shall be inserted in the patent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAREY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CAREY, Mr. PASCO, and Mr. MCLAURIN were appointed.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4326) to subject to State taxation national-bank notes and United States Treasury notes, which is a bill that has heretofore passed this body.

Mr. SHERMAN. From what committee does the bill come?

Mr. GEORGE. From the Committee on the Judiciary. It was formerly reported from that committee when Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, was chairman, and the bill was framed to a large extent by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have a general impression that United States notes are taxable under existing laws. I would rather that the bill should go over until to-morrow, so as to have an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think in the State of Ohio they are already taxed.

Mr. GEORGE. I give notice, then, that I shall call up the bill to-morrow morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PAUL M'CORMICK.

Mr. POWER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1262) for the relief of Paul McCormick.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 12, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one thousand six," and insert "three;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, directed to audit and allow Paul McCormick, of Montana, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as to them shall seem just and reasonable, for the loss sustained by said McCormick by reason of the change made by the officers of the United States as to the place of delivering the wood after the contract of August 3, 1870, was made and entered into by said McCormick, not to exceed the sum of $300, the same to be in full satisfaction of all claims or demands on account of loss.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVER O'BRIEN.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House bill 650, which is on the table of the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 650) to remove charge of desertion standing against Oliver O'Brien: which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered and put on its passage. The Committee on Military Affairs have examined it, and it is all right.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARRATRY ON THE HIGH SEAS.

Mr. VILAS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4606) to amend sections 5360 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I make no objection to the bill, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the question whether some provision should not be inserted that the bill shall not apply to offenses heretofore committed. Otherwise it would be an ex post facto law. Punishment by imprisonment is different from punishment by death. I suppose we could hardly provide that all persons who have heretofore committed an offense punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment for life. Undoubtedly it could be so provided as to offenses committed after the passage of the bill. The bill commutes all sentences for the crimes specified from death to imprisonment. I think there should be a provision to the effect that the proposed act shall not apply to offenses heretofore committed.

Mr. VILAS. I have no objection to the amendment, but it strikes me it is rather unnecessary. If the proposed act increased the degree of punishment, such an amendment would undoubtedly be necessary.

Mr. HOAR. It is a different punishment in substance, and I suppose there are human beings, of whom I am one, who think it would increase the punishment. I should rather be executed at once than be imprisoned for life.

Mr. VILAS. I have no objection to the amendment if the Senator from Massachusetts desires that it shall be made.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end the words:

This act shall apply only to offenses hereafter committed.

Mr. VILAS. "And shall not affect pending prosecutions."

Mr. HOAR. Very well; that may be added, although the other clause would cover it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the words:

This act shall apply only to offenses hereafter committed, and shall not affect pending prosecutions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether, as an amendment has been made, he proposes to have the title amended by adding "relative to crimes upon the high seas," or some such expression, so that the title will indicate the character of the bill?

Mr. VILAS. The title of the bill is to amend two sections of the Revised Statutes designated, which relate to barratry on the high seas.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that he add those words to the title.

Mr. VILAS. I have no objection to the amendment to add to the title the words, "relating to barratry on the high seas."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the title will be amended as indicated. The Chair hears none.

ANDREW L. GRUGETT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider House bill 1461, to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew L. Grugett.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1461) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew L. Grugett as a former member of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] yesterday gave notice that to-day after the routine morning business he would ask the Senate to consider pension bills on the Calendar. I hope he may do so, and that he will add to it bills granting relief reported by the Military Affairs Committee. As a rule, they are akin to pension cases, simply straightening the record of soldiers, and I hope the Senator may include those bills in his request.

RESERVOIRS ON HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. WASHBURN. Preceding that order, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 7488, in relation to leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas for cold water-reservoirs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation, Arkansas, for cold-water reservoirs.

Mr. WASHBURN. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That on the termination of any lease granted under authority of this act, the Secretary of the Interior shall have like power and authority in his discretion to extend or renew the same for additional periods of not exceeding twenty years.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN. In line 14, I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "one;" so as to read: "an annual rental of $100."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BERRY. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BERRY, Mr. MCLAURIN, and Mr. CAREY were appointed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], in charge of the Indian appropriation bill, being necessarily detained from the Chamber for a few minutes, I submit the report of the conference committee on that bill. We report an agreement upon sundry amendments and a disagreement on others. I ask that the agreements may be concurred in, and that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the other House, and ask for a further conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6913) "Making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And hereafter the annual salares of the several Indian agents shall be as provided for in this act;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out in line 4 of said amendment the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "To supervise the purchase of Indian supplies, four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase land for homes for the Digger Indians, Central California, and for the erection of suitable houses thereon, and to aid them in agricultural pursuits, $10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Such consent shall be made before the agent of the reservation, and he shall send to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs his certificate that such consent has been voluntarily given before such child shall be removed from such reservation. And it shall be unlawful for any Indian agent, or other employé of the Government, to induce, or seek to induce, by withholding rations, or by other improper means, the parents or next of kin of any Indian to consent to the removal of any Indian child beyond the limits of any reservation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 21, 47, 62, 63, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 119, and 120.

WILKINSON CALL,
F. M. COCKRELL,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN M. ALLEN,
JOHN L. WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HOAR. I should like the attention of the Senator from Missouri who has charge of the bill. Perhaps I heard imperfectly the agreement of the conference committee, but is it true that the bill as it is now left provides that no Indian child shall be sent to school out of the reservation or district without the consent of the next of kin, if there be no parents? Is that what the bill means? Perhaps I heard it incorrectly, but suppose the parents of Indian children die and there are no next of kin to the eldest child except a baby a year old or younger children under the age of consent, are they given authority to override the judgment of the representative of the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment as agreed to, is as follows:

That no Indian child shall be sent from any Indian reservation to a school beyond the State or Territory in which said reservation is situated without the voluntary consent of the father or mother of such child, if either of them are living, and if neither of them are living, without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of such child. Such consent shall be made before the agent of the reservation, etc.

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the next of kin be a child of tender years, a baby, or a person ten degrees off with no interest in the child?

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose the consent would be sufficient under the law.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the provision with the objectionable attachment came over in the bill from the other House and that we succeeded in striking out the objectionable attachment, and it leaves that part just as it came from the House.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator sees the point I make?

Mr. TELLER. I do not approve of it, but it seems to be necessary.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire rises to a question of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is absolutely impossible for Senators in this wing of the Chamber to hear one word of the colloquy that is going on between the two distinguished members of the Judiciary Committee who are now both occupying the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from New Hampshire was occupying the floor when he made his speech. If he was not doing so he was clearly out of order. I suppose this matter can be corrected in another year if it is important enough to make a correction necessary, and therefore I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think anything will be necessary.

Mr. HOAR. Of course, the other House in framing the bill clearly made an oversight in this particular. Very likely there will not any cases arise in a year. I shall not make any point on the provision except to call attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee on conference.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CALL, Mr. COCKRELL, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4012) for the relief of Thorwald Olsen;

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

A bill (S. 1377) for the relief of William Hendershott, of Butteville, Oregon;

A bill (S. 1468) for the relief of James L. Townsend; and

A bill (S. 2150) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano, of New York, N. Y.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5575, being the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate committee amendments may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill, and that other amendments be deferred until after the consideration of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

For public building Clarksville, Tenn.: The limit of cost of site and building is hereby extended $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For public building at Davenport, Iowa: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to construct all portions of the public building so as to make the same fireproof, and also make all portions of said building two stories high, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 10, to insert:

For post-office at Fort Worth, Tex.: The limit of cost of site and building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches complete, is hereby extended $40,000.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to amend the Senate amendment by inserting a provision for the building of the Philadelphia post-office.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will let us get through with the committee amendments, and then recur to it afterwards. The agreement was just made that the committee amendments shall be first considered.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator prefers that course I will wait.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill will be open to amendment just the same after we have acted on committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

For all other necessary expenditures, to enable the Commission to give effect to the provisions of the "Act to regulate commerce," and all acts and amendments supplementary thereto, $184,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what the object is in depriving the Interstate Commerce Commission of the right to employ counsel in the conduct of its affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. We do not take away from them the right that they already have. This provision, as amended, simply leaves the law as it has been for years. As it stands, it would be practically an express direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission to employ attorneys. We did not think it was best to build up an Attorneys-General office in that bureau for the present.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Missouri knows very well that all the business of the Interstate Commerce Commission is very important, and certainly the Commission ought not to be limited in its powers. I suppose that the House inserted these words because they believed there was some doubt of the right of the Commission to employ counsel in appropriate cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there is any doubt about their general jurisdiction. We leave the law just as it has been for years. They have been getting along remarkably well, and we did not think it was best to make any change.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this item for a moment. I will state to begin with that the secretary of the Commission has always acted as disbursing officer of the Commission. Whether the provision that we have made cutting off men from holding two offices would interfere with that I do not know.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it would.

Mr. CULLOM. I am inclined to think that if the words "who shall act as disbursing agent or clerk in addition to his duties as secretary" were added it might make it certain.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no such office as a disbursing office. The clerk does the disbursing, and has been doing it all the time.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no question about the salary involved. It is merely a question of whether he will have the right to act, in view of the other amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no difficulty about a man performing the duties of two or three offices if he does not get any additional pay for the other offices.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not offer any amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 43, after line 18, to insert:

World's Columbian Exposition: To enable the President to reimburse the Republic of France and French exhibitors for losses sustained by them by fire on the night of January 8 and 9, 1894, in the Building of Manufactures and Liberal Arts of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, $70,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the President shall cause proofs to be taken, satisfactory to himself, and shall determine the amount to be awarded to the French Government and to the several exhibitors, respectively, in full for all said losses.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be necessary to change the amount in that item. As I understand, the loss was greater than the amount which has been inserted by the committee. Let the amendment be adopted for the present, and we can change the sum in the Senate. I expected to get some information in relation to the subject this morning, but have not yet received it. Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire whether a Senator who desires to offer an amendment which has the approval of a committee shall offer it now or hereafter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are first being acted upon. After the committee amendments are disposed of other amendments will be in order.

Mr. HOAR. I have been absent from the Chamber for a few minutes, and I desire to raise a question as to the committee amendment on page 87 in regard to military records. I should like unanimous consent to have the amendment considered as being open.

Mr. COCKRELL. To which amendment does the Senator from Massachusetts refer?

Mr. HOAR. The amendment which transfers all the military records to the War Department. I wish to offer an amendment to it. If the Senate understands that the matter is open I will wait until the remaining committee amendments are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the vote by which the amendment on page 87 in relation to the military records was agreed to be reconsidered?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be considered as open.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote by which the amendment was agreed to has to be reconsidered before the amendment can be regarded as open.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. Is an amendment in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An amendment modifying an amendment of the committee would be in order under the unanimous-consent agreement, but not an original amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to propose an amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I intended to propose an amendment, but the Chair advised me that amendments are not in order just now.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is an amendment to the amendment. We desire to amend the committee amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is understood that the committee amendments will still be open to amendment just the same as ever after we have run through them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be offered if the Chair thinks otherwise.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I wish to offer two amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand from the Chair that, being amendments to a committee amendment, this is the time to offer them.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. On page 110, line 18, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "seven" and inserting "eleven;" so as to read:

Their officers and employés, $11,500.

The law makes it necessary for the Board of Managers to visit and inspect the different branch homes once a year, and the amount allowed for that purpose by the Appropriations Committee, $7,500, is not sufficient. I read a part of a letter from Gen. Franklin on this subject:

The amount estimated for traveling expenses of the Board and its officers and employés is $11,500. Of this amount $1,500 is for inspection of the State homes. The remainder is to pay for the actual traveling expenses of the managers and for the inspection of the seven branches of the home by its own officers.

I trust the Senate will allow this slight increase in the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. On page 110, line 21, I move to further amend the committee amendment by striking out "one thousand five hundred" and inserting "three thousand;" so that it will read: "Telegrams and other incidental expenses, $3,000."

I move this increase on the strength of a communication which I have received from Gen. Franklin. He states that $3,000 for rent, medical examinations, etc., is absolutely necessary. The amount which the Appropriations Committee have allowed, $1,500, would not cover the rent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total in line 14 will be changed in accordance with the amendments which have been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 22 strike out "twenty-nine thousand three hundred and forty-six" and insert "thirty-four thousand eight hundred and forty-six dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 110, line 24, after the word "million," to strike out "three hundred thousand eight hundred and seventy-five," and insert "two hundred and ninety-eight thousand eight hundred and seventy-five dollars;" so as to read: "$2,298,873."

Mr. COCKRELL. That has to be changed, too.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. The total will have to be changed to correspond with the amendments which have been adopted in the preceding paragraph.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out "$298,875," and inserting "$304,373;" so as to read: "In all, $304,373."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

And insert:

That all amounts disbursed from the appropriation of a branch home shall be disbursed by the treasurer of that branch, except such expenditures for services, stationery, tableware, clothing, and bedding as may be required by the Board of Managers to be legally made by the president and acting treasurer; and all disbursements shall be made in conformity with sections 3678 and 3679, Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, line 17, after the word "pay," to insert "and allowance;" and in line 20, after the word "whatever," to insert "except upon written authority of the Board of Managers;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Board of Managers shall classify all the officers and employés of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and establish a rate of pay and allowance for each class, and the rate so established shall not be increased by fees, perquisites, allowances, or advantages under any pretense whatever, except upon written authority of the Board of Managers; and no employé shall be borne on more than one pay roll or voucher.

State or Territorial homes: For continuing aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, $570,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Before we pass from the subject of the soldiers' homes, I wish to state that I am exceedingly glad to find that the Committee on Appropriations have accepted very nearly all the amendments recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs. As the bill came from the other House, those of us who know the great value and the merit of these homes and the supreme excellence with which they are managed felt a good deal of apprehension that something unkind or unfavorable might result from a feeling of hostility against the homes.

I simply desire to put on record my opinion of the homes and their management. I have naturally been very much interested in them ever since they were established in 1867. I have visited many of the homes. I have frequently gone with the Board. I individually, not in connection with any official visit whatever, have again and again gone to the home at Hampton especially. The management of the homes in general, that is to say, the head of the management, under Gen. Franklin, is in my own town of Hartford. The general, who is president of the whole concern, is my neighbor and personal friend. That gives me additional means of becoming acquainted with the matter, for it is a frequent topic of conversation between us.

I know many of the men who in the last twenty-seven years have been connected with the management of these most beneficent institutions. I think I speak with some knowledge when I say that I know of nothing under the purview of the whole Federal Government that is better managed than the soldiers' homes. There is a Board composed of eleven men, I think, who as a rule, although I think there have been two or three exceptions, were soldiers in the late war. The corporation is, in a measure, distinct from any department of the Government.

These veteran officers have been looking out for the interests of from fifteen to twenty-five thousand old soldiers a year. They are welcomed to the homes on every occasion. The inmates feel that the managers are their friends, their guardians, that they come to see them and look out for them.

I know of no work done with a better combination of gentleness, patriotism, and fidelity to duty to the Federal Government. I know of no disbursements that are better managed, no contracts for clothing of all descriptions and for supplies of all description better than those made by these men.

The board consists of Gen. William B. Franklin, of Connecticut; Gen. William J. Sewell, of New Jersey; Gen. JOHN C. BLACK, of Illinois; Gen. Martin T. McMahon, of New York; Col. JOHN L. MITCHELL, of Milwaukee, our colleague in the Senate; Maj. E. N. Morrill, of Kansas; Gen. A. L. Pearson, of Pennsylvania; Gen. James Barnett, of Cleveland, Ohio; Gen. Francis Fessenden, of Maine; Col. George W. Steele, of Marion, Ind., and Maj. A. W. Barrett, of Los Angeles, Cal.

There is in a certain sense competition, you may say, for places on the board; that is to say, the members are chosen with regard to their locality, and the members of Congress who are influential in naming a new man have always been anxious to suggest a man of high character and high business qualifications. A new member has been put upon the board, Col. Sidney G. Cooke, of Kansas, a man who by his record and his character as a gentleman is eminently fit to go on the board.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I will state, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me, that Gen. Barnett was retired from the board at the last election, and his place has been taken by Gen. Anderson.

Mr. HAWLEY. I simply wish to say that I am grateful to the Committee on Appropriations for having listened to our amendments, and I beg Senators to remember always that this institution is one of the best managed of the whole Government.

Mr. HALE. I merely wish to say, what I hope is apropos to the eulogium which the Senator from Connecticut has given us upon the management of the homes, that it would be a very ungrateful return on the part of the management of the soldiers' homes if they did not conduct things upon a good, fair business basis. They have always been the pets of Congress, and there is no institution and no part of the Government to which Congress appropriates money so freely and so lavishly as to these homes. There is no claim made by the managers which is not attended to by Congress. There is no undue attempt to restrict or restrain them, but money is poured forth to the homes as free as water. If the gentlemen who constitute the board which managed the institutions did not in turn see to it that everything was right in return for the generosity of Congress, things would certainly be in a bad way.

Mr. HAWLEY. I agree partly with the Senator from Maine, but I think there has been nothing which can properly be called the lavishing of money on these homes. They are conducted with as much severity as to economy as a cotton manufactory or an iron foundry. For example, the cost of maintenance of these old soldiers is $141 a year. There are eleemosynary institutions and penal institutions where men are kept for a little less than that, but nobody wants to put these old soldiers upon the basis of inmates of an almshouse or a State prison.

That very figure, $141, is evidence of the economy of the gentlemen in the management of the homes, and there is evidence coming from the silence in regard to it that the managers are not governed by any selfish desire. They generously give their services. They get not one farthing of pay, with the exception of Gen. Franklin, whose whole time is practically devoted to the board. Gen. Franklin had for a time $4,000 a year. He is cut down in the pending bill to $2,500 a year.

He is a gentleman whose salary in private business, as I happen to know, was $10,000 a year not long ago. This service requires his whole time. He begged his friends to say nothing about the reduction in his salary if Congress would only give the board in other respects what the homes need.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question before he resumes his seat. The Senator, in referring to the cost of maintaining the soldiers, stated that the amount is $141 per capita. I wish to inquire whether that simply covers the expense of keeping the soldiers, or whether it is the average of the entire expense of maintaining the homes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose it is the average expense, except that of construction, which has been going on. Additional buildings of various kinds have been needed. The homes have grown. It is practically what is called maintenance. I do not think it includes the 10 per cent for wastage which is ordinarily estimated upon buildings.

Mr. PEFFER. It is the average current expense?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I could not hear the explanation of the Senator from Connecticut, but the cost is $140.93 per capita per annum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I called it $141.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. That includes everything except construction.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose so. The Senator from Wisconsin is one of the board, and he says it covers everything but general construction.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, before passing from this subject I merely desire to supplement the suggestions made by the Senator from Connecticut, which perhaps fully cover the subject-matter, by the statement that I myself have felt a very great interest in the management and direction of these soldier homes. I have frequently visited them, and I believe they are models not only in the manner of their conduct by the managers, but in affording, as they do, a place of refuge and rest for the veteran soldiers who are so greatly disabled as not to be able to make their own way in the world.

I should very greatly regret to see any decided or material change in their management. The Soldiers' Home in this city, which is supported in part by the contributions from the regular Army, is very properly under the direction of the officers of the regular service, but I hope the method by which these volunteer homes have thus far been kept under the management of volunteer soldiers will continue. I think it would be a disastrous thing if there should be any decided change in that direction or any attempt to place them more immediately under the care of the officers of the regular Army. So long as there are eminent and well qualified men who had service in the volunteer army ready to give their time and best exertions for the benefit of the homes, I think we should continue the present system. I am glad to see that the Committee on Appropriations have so determined.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert, beginning at line 1, page 115:

UNDER NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Naval Academy: That the provision in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, approved on the 26th day of July, 1894, and reading as follows: "That every Member or Delegate of Congress whose district or Territory is now unrepresented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who is not an actual resident of the district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of September, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy, and the Secretary of the Navy shall nominate such candidate for appointment to the Academy, subject to qualifications now prescribed by law," is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That every Member or Delegate in Congress whose district or Territory is not represented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who was at the time of his appointment an actual resident of such district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of September, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as cadet at the Naval Academy.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to that portion of the provision which provides that an appointee to the Naval Academy shall be an actual resident of the district to which his appointment is credited, and to say that in the naval appropriation bill a few days ago an amendment was offered by myself and agreed to which required the appointee to have been an actual bona fide constant resident of the State or Territory to which his nomination was credited for at least two years before his appointment. I am inclined to believe that unless this paragraph is amended it may be construed to be a repeal of the naval appropriation bill in that respect, it being the last expression of the legislative will on the subject; and I ask the chairman of the committee to insert the same words here.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision in the pending bill reads:

That the provision in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, approved on the 26th day of July, 1894, and reading as follows:

Then follows the amendment that was inserted in the naval appropriation bill, on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. No; the amendment I added to the naval appropriation bill is not here, and I think it should be inserted. It is a provision that the appointee "shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of the district in which the vacancy exists."

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator will see that this simply authorizes an appointment to be made under the provision in the law of July 26, 1894, which is the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. The language quoted in the amendment is taken literally from the naval appropriation bill. To that I offered an amendment which required that the appointee should be an actual bona fide resident of the State or Territory from which his appointment was credited for two years preceding the date of his appointment.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment does not change that provision at all.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what are the Senators talking about? We can not hear a word on this side.

Mr. ALLEN. I will state what I was talking about. When the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] had charge of the naval appropriation bill some weeks ago, the language which is quoted in the pending amendment was amended on my motion so as to require the appointee to the Naval Academy to have been for two years an actual bona fide resident of the State or Territory to which his appointment was credited, and I ask that the same amendment be included in this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Nebraska is mistaken. His amendment did not apply to the special appointments to be made hereafter; the six or eight appointments which are to be made by gentlemen who have not made appointments heretofore. We had to surrender that part of the provision; but hereafter the appointment will be made from the bona fide residents of the district.

Mr. ALLEN. The question with me is whether the pending amendment, if agreed to as here proposed, will not have the effect of repealing the provision that was put on the naval appropriation bill some days ago.

Mr. HALE. It is limited by its terms, and it is simply to correct a mistake. There were two negatives by a blunder in the naval appropriation bill in reference to the appointment in the districts where the appointments had been made of nonresidents, but the general phrase that the member representing that district may now make an appointment from his district is governed by the law of the naval appropriation bill and all law upon that subject except what is corrected in terms. The Senator need have no doubt about that.

Mr. ALLEN. If the construction the Senator from Maine puts upon the law is to be followed by the Department I have no objection to the amendment, but in the naval appropriation bill this language occurs:

That every Member or Delegate of Congress whose district or Territory is now unrepresented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who is not an actual resident of the district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of September, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy.

In the naval appropriation bill that was so amended as to require the appointee to have been two years preceding the date of his appointment an actual bona fide resident of the State or Territory to which his appointment was credited. I am under the impression that if the amendment is adopted exactly as it is drawn here it will have the effect to repeal that provision of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. Why does not the Senator put in the words "subject to the qualification now prescribed by law?"

Mr. ALLEN. I will accept of any amendment which will preserve that provision in the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HALE. That will take care of all possible question.

Mr. ALLEN. That will be acceptable.

Mr. HALE. Put in those words at the end of line 22. I think there is something in the point which the Senator from Nebraska makes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of line 22, page 115:

Subject to the qualifications prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 121, line 20, after the words "laws of the United States," to strike out "and of the enforcement of the provisions of Title XXVI of the Revised Statutes, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of the United States courts: For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court; of the circuit and district courts of the United States; of the supreme court of the District of Columbia; of the district court of Alaska; of the court of the Indian Territory; of the circuit court of appeals; of the Court of Private Land Claims; of suits and preparations for or in defense of suits in which the United States is interested; of the prosecution of offenses committed against the United States, and in the enforcement of the laws of the United States; specifically the expenses stated under the following appropriations, namely:

The next amendment was, on page 122, line 16, after the word "deputy," to strike out "and actual traveling expenses paid for each;" and in line 19, after the word "deputy," to strike out:

And no fee shall be paid to any marshal for the execution of any warrant from a United States commissioner unless the same shall have been executed within sixty days after the warrant was issued.

So as to make the additional proviso read:

Provided further, That hereafter no marshal or deputy marshal be allowed more than one mileage for each mile actually and necessarily traveled, irrespective of the number of writs he may execute in making such travel; nor shall any marshal or deputy marshal be allowed any additional mileage incident to the execution or return of any writ of arrest, commitment, or removal other than the 10 cents a mile now allowed by law for each deputy and guard; and no mileage shall be allowed upon any writ not executed or when the travel was without cost to marshal or deputy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 122, after line 22, to insert:

For defraying expenses incurred by marshals in executing orders, warrants, and processes of United States courts for the protection of property in the hands of receivers of such courts, and for the arrest and detention until trial of persons arrested for violating such orders and resisting the execution of such warrants and processes, to be audited and allowed by the Attorney-General, $404,000, and said sum shall also be available for expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1894.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 123, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 127, after line 6, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. After line 17, on page 127, is the appropriate place for the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] about publishing some state documents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after line 17, page 127:

To enable the Secretary of State to publish the Revolutionary archives now deposited in the Department of State, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to add after the preceding amendment, on page 127, after line 17:

International Prison Congress: To pay the expenses of the delegates appointed by the National Prison Congress at St. Paul, on the 16th day of June, 1894, to attend the International Prison Congress at Paris, in June, 1895, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. After the words "to pay the expenses of the delegates," in line 19, I move to insert "to be;" in the same line, after the words "by the," I move to strike out the words "National Prison Congress, at St. Paul, on the 16th day of June, 1894;" and to insert in lieu thereof, "President;" so as to read:

International Prison Congress: To pay the expenses of the delegates to be appointed by the President, to attend the International Prison Congress at Paris, in June, 1895, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Those delegates are to be appointed by the President to attend the Congress.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether, as he moves to amend the amendment, it would not imply an appointment to be made hereafter. Is there an existing law authorizing that appointment by the President?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; then that covers it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The law authorizes the President to appoint them. There was a prison congress which met at St. Paul in June, and they recommended certain persons, but we can not afford to appoint those persons when the law gives the President the power to select them.

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether there is an existing law to that effect?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 128, after line 10, to insert:

Index to Congressional documents: To pay for the work done in preparing and completing the document index of the Fifty-second Congress, by Alonzo W. Church, $1,000: Provided, That the preparation of said index for other Congresses shall not be done.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what is the meaning of the proviso in lines 14 and 15:

Provided, That the preparation of said index for other Congresses shall not be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is simply to stop the work. It ought to have read, "the preparation of said index for subsequent Congresses." There is a large number of volumes, and Congress has not yet seen fit to print them. We do not see any necessity of going on and having work done if it is not going to be printed. That is the only object in view.

Mr. HOAR. It is rather an awkward phrase. I did not exactly understand what it meant.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the word "Congresses," I move to strike out "other" and insert "subsequent."

Mr. HOAR. It would be a better phrase, I think, to say that "there shall be no further work upon it," instead of "shall not be done."

Mr. PALMER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts what is the use of the proviso at all?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know about that.

Mr. PALMER. What is the use of the proviso?

Mr. HALE. It is very difficult to stop this man who is going on with the work. He will not stop unless in terms he is directed to stop.

Mr. PALMER. That is rather a fault I am disposed to commend. If he is directed to do a particular work I do not see how we could stop it.

Mr. HALE. After the word "Provided" I move to strike out the words "that the preparation of said index for other Congresses shall not be done," and insert:

That no work upon the index of any other Congress shall be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 128, after line 15, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate who were borne on the rolls of the Senate August 1, 1893, and who were not borne on said rolls November 3, 1893, at the close of the first session of the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation paid them according to law, $11,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no payment shall be made hereunder to any officer or employé who was reëmployed in the service of the Senate within the period named.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, after line 2, to insert:

For heating apparatus and repairs of Maltby Building, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, after line 4, to insert:

For the rent of warehouse for storage of public documents, formerly in the Maltby Building, $945.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, after line 7, to insert:

To pay Charles H. Evans extra compensation for preparing statistical tables and for services rendered to the Committee on Finance, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 129, in line 16, after the word "building," to insert "not to exceed $200,000;" and in line 18, after the word "law," to insert "and the officer in charge of said building is hereby directed to report to Congress at its next session plans and estimates of cost for a tunnel, with suitable conveying apparatus for the rapid transmission of books, papers, and messages at all times between the said building and the Senate and the House wings of the Capitol;" so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the construction of the building for the Library of Congress, and for each and every purpose connected with the same, $700,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into for any work or materials required for the construction of said building, not to exceed $200,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law; and the officer in charge of said building is hereby directed to report to Congress, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895; insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment numbered 65 to the said bill, and agreed to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. FORMAN, and Mr. WAUGH managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia; and

A bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 962) for the relief of Capt. Ceran St. Vrain's company of New Mexico Mounted Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 4012) for the relief of Thorwald Olsen;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 199) relative to the medal of honor authorized by the acts of July 12, 1862, and March 3, 1863.

Mr. HOAR. Let me inquire of the Chair whether bills paying personal claims do not ordinarily go to the Committee on Claims?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that they are bills for the removal of charge of desertion, and matters of that character.

Mr. HOAR. I thought they were claims for the payment of money.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 7383) relating to lights on fishing vessels; and

A bill (H. R. 7827) to authorize a bridge across the Perdido River between the States of Florida and Alabama.

The bill (H. R. 7753) to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the interstate fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 134, after line 4, to insert:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

To enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to repair the Government Printing Office, provide fire escapes, and put said building in a safe and secure condition, and to enable the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to rent, if necessary, any buildings for use of the Printing Office, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 134, after line 12, to insert:

Mr. MANDERSON. By request of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], who is engaged in a conference committee, I move to strike out the paragraph just read and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the amendment of the committee from line 13, page 134, down to line 21, page 135, inclusive, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, empowered and instructed to purchase for and in the name of the United States, for the purpose of erecting thereon a building to be used as a Government Printing Office, the following-described real estate with improvements thereon: Lots 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square 678, in the city of Washington, being the west half of said square, containing about 170,648 square feet, or in case of failure to secure said lots by negotiations with owners, or a satisfactory title thereto, such as may be approved by the Attorney-General of the United States, he is hereby authorized and directed to secure same by condemnation proceedings in like manner provided in the act approved June 25, 1890, "to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square No. 323, in the city of Washington, D. C., to provide an eligible site for a city post-office building:" Provided, That the price to be paid for the above-described property shall not exceed the sum of $243,175, the payment of which sum shall be made from the money heretofore appropriated for the purpose aforesaid, under section 2 of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 30, 1890, which is hereby made immediately available therefor.

Mr. MANDERSON. This amendment to the amendment of the committee proposes to substitute for what is known as the Mahone lot that which is called the baseball lot. I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate by any extended remarks upon this subject. It would be like the threshing again of straw that has been frequently threshed.

The persistency with which the Mahone lot is attempted to be foisted upon the Government commands one's admiration and respect, not by reason of any resulting good that may come to the Government by its purchase, but one can not help admiring and respecting the persistency of those who on their friendships insist upon the purchase of this lot.

I have shown frequently and at length how unfit it is for the purpose for which it is proposed to be purchased. I have shown frequently that the price proposed to be paid for it is far beyond its value.

The amendment that is proposed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] suggests the purchase of a piece of property very close to the Capitol, in every respect conveniently located, near to the present site of the Government Printing Office, and nearer than the present site to the Capitol, of sufficient dimensions, of proper foundation capability, having that square or nearly square area which is a necessity for such a building, and having proximity to a railroad that would permit the supplies for the Government Printing Office to enter, with a saving of expense to the Government, and its product to have its exit by cars, with the strong probability, aye, almost certainty, that this condition as to railroad facilities will not be interfered with in coming time.

I regret exceedingly, Mr. President, that the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to come to this conclusion, and I regret still more that this matter is to be taken up in the absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who, while at one time an advocate for the purchase of the Mahone site, has seen other and stronger light on this subject, and does not believe now in its purchase. He desires the extension and reconstruction of the buildings of the present Government Printing Office. I think that would be infinitely better than the purchase of the site that is reported in this bill, and yet I can see objections to such an extension, the main one, in my mind, being the very great cost of acquiring the additional land that will be needed, and the certainty that Congress will never permit railway tracks to cross North Capitol street and enter the present grounds.

Mr. President, I do not desire to go into any argument upon this subject. I am so anxious that the present deplorable condition shall be gotten out of and that we shall have a Government Printing Office in which the lives of employés will be safe, that I stand almost ready to accept anything that will give to us a proper public building; but I protest that the Government of the United States should be influenced by but the one motive, and that is to obtain the most convenient and best site that can be obtained for its Government Printing Office.

Nothing has occurred in all these years during which this unpleasant controversy has gone on to change the wisdom of the conclusion that a disinterested board came to years ago. Looking over the entire situation, charged with the duty by the Congress of the United States, that board, composed of the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Windom, the Architect of the Capitol, Mr. Clark, and the then Public Printer, Mr. Palmer, all agreed and reported to Congress that of all the places in the District, all things considered, the very best was the baseball site, the purchase of which is provided for in the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], and I hope that this site may be selected, and speedily selected, for it certainly is by all odds the best purchase that the Government can make.

Mr. HAWLEY. I second what has been said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], and it saves me the trouble of saying it, for he has said it so much better than I could do.

I served twelve years on the Committee on Printing and have heard a great deal of this matter, which has now been pending before Congress for a series of years.

The baseball lot is the best lot in the District for the Government Printing Office. It is a square or two nearer to the Capitol than the existing Printing Office; it is immediately adjacent to a railway, so that a side track could be run into the basement of the building, bringing in the enormous quantity of supplies of every description which are there used, and a branch post-office could be established there carrying away the enormous burden of books which the Government issues every year with the least possible trouble.

I know that it is attempted to find fault with the baseball lot, and it was said that perhaps the ground there did not have a sufficiently good foundation; but we had the best engineers there are in the District to examine it, and they said the foundation was abundantly good. Some of the men who said the foundation at that lot was not good were afterwards advocates of the location of the new city post-office; and yet it was necessary to drive piles in order to secure a reasonable foundation there for that building.

In my judgment there never was an objection to the baseball lot that could stand for a single moment before any competent board. It is one of the mysteries of Congressional life to me that there should be such a persistent, and I have no doubt such a successful, attempt to locate the Government Printing Office at least a mile away from the Capitol, not convenient to us, and not convenient for the general uses of the Government. I do not desire to have that building immediately under our eyes, where we should be troubled with the smoke, though the smoke from a building used for such a purpose, where there is no offensive material, is a small matter.

The baseball lot is a reasonable distance from the Capitol; it has a good foundation; it is close to a railroad, and in every respect the land is good enough to build a printing office upon. I never knew any reason why the special lot named in the amendment should be selected above a thousand other lots.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] repeat what they have stated here before, and, to speak mildly, in a rather offensive way, as it seems to me, of the persistency of those who advocate the amendment inserted in the bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

I would suggest to the Senators who talk about the persistency of the friends of this amendment that there is quite as much persistency on their part when they press upon the Senate the taking of the baseball lot, a lot that is short by 40,000 feet of what every Public Printer has declared must be had for a proper public building for the purpose intended; a lot that has been declared by the best engineers in the city to be in many respects totally unfit as to its foundation, etc. It comes with ill grace for the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Connecticut to speak about the persistency of those who support this amendment.

They have been equally persistent in voting for and pressing a proposition which has been twice voted down by the Senate.

The proposition now before the Senate, which is reported by the Committee on Appropriations, has been twice approved by the Senate. If there is anything that is curious and anomalous in Congressional life which ought to astonish the Senator from Connecticut, it ought to be that after the Senate has twice declared a lot was unfit and unsuitable for the purposes of the Government Printing Office, he should still persist in insisting that the Senate should accept that lot.

The lot which is proposed to be purchased by the committee is one in the immediate neighborhood of the baseball lot, the ground of which is a little higher. It is a little further away, but not enough so to make it in the slightest degree objectionable on that account. It is in immediate connection with a railroad, and tracks can be run into the building in better shape than could be done in a building erected on the baseball lot. All the railroad advantages that could possibly be had on the baseball lot can be had on the other; it is 16 feet higher; it is a lot upon which a foundation can be had without the slightest trouble or difficulty; it is nearly 50 per cent cheaper; and just as well adapted in every respect for the purpose desired as the baseball lot can possibly be.

If there was ground enough in the baseball lot, that lot would still be objectionable; but there is not enough ground, and its advocates have never pretended that there was enough ground in it for the purpose; but they said we could take the parking and we could thus crowd out over the streets, and probably we could get enough ground in that way so that the building could be put upon it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I know the Senator from Colorado will desire to be corrected in any misstatement he may inadvertently make.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, if I have made any.

Mr. MANDERSON. The lot referred to is not the baseball lot at all. The lot he refers to is what is known as the Johnson lot. The Johnson lot, after the loss of the baseball-lot proposition, was recommended by the Committee on Printing. That is the lot which it was claimed heretofore was too small for the purpose. The baseball lot is larger than the Mahone lot.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANDERSON. Indeed it is.

Mr. TELLER. I think not. I think I did fall into an error in confounding the baseball lot for the moment with the Johnson lot; but the same objection which exists to the Johnson lot exists as to the baseball lot, except as to the size. Perhaps I have confounded the two for the moment, for there has been equal persistency on the part of certain Senators here in pressing the Johnson lot. I believe the Senators who have been so much in favor of the baseball lot regarded the Johnson lot as the next best thing they could get.

Mr. MANDERSON. They did.

Mr. TELLER. They did advocate the purchase of that lot, and therefore I somewhat confounded their action with the present suggestion.

Here is a piece of ground that can be bought for very much less per foot than either the Johnson lot or the baseball lot; it is very much more accessible to the railroad; it is 16 feet higher; it is solid ground, where there will be no trouble about securing good foundations; it is in a good neighborhood, and it is where the Government can take more ground, if it needs it, than it can obtain at the baseball lot or at any other place.

So far as persistency is concerned, it is a persistency born of the knowledge that this is the most suitable place. I assert here that there never has been presented to the Senate but one lot that has anything like the merits of the Mahone lot, and that was not considered by the Senate at all. That lot is in the vicinity of the Capitol, and an amendment to purchase it was presented at the last session by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

That was an available and valuable piece of ground, but its purchase did not receive the sanction of the Senate.

I repeat, the Senate has twice asserted that neither the baseball lot nor the Johnson lot will answer the purpose. Twice the Senate has asserted that the Mahone lot was the proper place for the Printing Office, and the committee could not well have accepted any other ground than that which the Senate had declared itself to be in favor of.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. TELLER. I am through.

Mr. CULLOM. All I desire to say is, that the amendment which is found in the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for consideration. In addition to the remarks of the Senator from Colorado, in explanation of the position of the Committee on Appropriations, I will say we were not hunting the privilege of inserting such an amendment, but it came to us from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Appropriations after due consideration adopted it with amendments.

I desire to repeat what has been said by the Senator from Colorado, that it does seem to me that it can not be properly and seriously charged that the friends of the Mahone lot have been persistent; at least that they have been more so than those who have been against it, because we had the indorsement of the action of the Senate twice repeated, as has been said by the Senator from Colorado, and it seemed the natural thing for the Committee on Appropriations to do was to insert a provision in this bill authorizing the Government to purchase the Mahone lot, so that we might eventually get started on the work of a public building for the use of the Printing Office.

Everybody is agreed that that is an important thing to do. The Committee on Appropriations not only thought that we ought to start the work of securing a site, getting plans, etc., but in view of the condition of the Printing Office building as it is now, we have proposed an appropriation which should make the present building secure in the mean time, while we are securing a public building on whatever site may be selected by the Government.

It seems to me that there ought not to be very much opposition to this proposition in the Senate after the Senate has twice voted by a very decided majority that the Mahone lot, as it is called, ought to be selected as a site for the Public Printing Office.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations for the purchase of what is known as the Mahone lot did not meet with my approval. I have never voted when this question was under consideration for the purchase of that lot. I do not care to go into a discussion at this time of the relative merits of the various sites which have been offered. I myself believe that the only proper thing to do is to acquire additional property in the square in which the Government Printing Office is now located. Believing that to be the right policy, I can not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

I am very much gratified, however, that we have been able to carry through the first clause of the amendment, making an appropriation which will enable us to at least make an effort to preserve the lives and the health of the people who are employed in the H street wing of the Printing Office. It gives full authority to the Chief of Engineers and the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to make some temporary provision for the poor people who are now employed in that building, which is dangerous, and where a calamity is likely to occur at any time.

For the reasons I have stated I can not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, nor for the one which comes from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment as it appears in the bill was not reported to the Senate by a united committee. A majority of the Committee on Appropriations reported in favor of placing this amendment upon the bill.

I say very frankly, so far as I am concerned, that I do not think such a provision ought to be placed upon an appropriation bill; but if the Senate is determined to place the selection of a site for the Government Printing Office upon an appropriation bill, in my judgment the lots adjoining the present location of the Public Printing Office are by far the best, and are the ones that ought to be selected. I shall, therefore, oppose the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as well as the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as is well known, I have heretofore, in the discussion that has taken place on this question, advocated the enlargement of the present plant, and I see no reason whatever for changing my mind in that respect. I think it is good business judgment, that it would be a great saving to the Government, and that no other scheme that has been proposed in Congress ought to stand in the way of doing what good business judgment would dictate in this matter.

I presume, Mr. President, that an amendment would not now be in order, but I desire to have read for information an amendment that I shall offer after the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska has been voted upon. If it is rejected, after the amendment I propose is read, I shall desire to occupy the attention of the Senate a single moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair.) The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $250,000, to provide accommodation for the Government Printing Office and the construction of the needed storage and distribution warehouses in connection therewith, in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 13, 1890, and suspended by act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, approved March 3, 1891, is hereby made available for the purposes provided for in the above act approved August 30, 1890; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay out of this sum an amount sufficient to purchase such portion of square No. 621, contiguous to the present Government Printing Office, in the city of Washington, D. C., as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Public Printer may deem necessary for the needs of the Government Printing Office: Provided, That the amount shall not exceed the amount of the said $250,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be observed that the amendment I have had read, which at the proper time I shall ask action upon, is in the line of the suggestions made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Both of those Senators have announced that they prefer that the present plant shall be enlarged, that additional land shall be purchased, and that the money shall be expended there rather than upon the sites concerning which so much controversy has heretofore been had.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate by a lengthy discussion of this question. I have heretofore endeavored to point out from a practical standpoint why I believe the appropriation should be made in the line of the amendment which I have suggested. If the present plant is enlarged, at least $300,000 will be saved to the Government in buildings that are already constructed, fireproof and safe in every way, and that are adequate for the purposes of the Government Printing Office so far as they go. That amount will be saved, not alone in the building, but in the water mains and gas mains which are already located there, and which would have to be reproduced if we select a separate lot or a lot not contiguous to the present Government Printing Office.

I am not going to make an attack upon the lot that is proposed to be purchased by the pending bill, but I am very much surprised to hear the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] make the statement that the foundation of that lot is on solid ground. I do not think that can be so. I have the testimony of men who have lived in that section of the city for a long number of years that that is filled ground, and the statement has been made to me, perhaps not correctly——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to state that there are no filled grounds in any portion of the lot which is proposed to be taken for a site. There is some filled ground in the property owned by these parties, but it is to the extreme east of this ground. None of the filled ground will be touched by any proposed plan for the taking of the Mahone lot.

Mr. GALLINGER. That does not correspond with the testimony which has been presented to me, statements of reputable men, who have lived in that section of the city all their lives.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I think he misunderstood the Senator from Colorado. The statement was that no part of the ground that would be used for building purposes by the plan that had been proposed would be filled ground, but that there is filled ground upon the east portion of the lot, which the Senator from Colorado thinks would not be covered by the building. That, I think, was the statement.

Mr. TELLER. It would not only not be covered by the building, but it would not be covered by the purchase. The Government would not purchase under the proposed plan any of the filled ground. I took the pains to go over this ground some time ago and examine it.

Mr. MANDERSON. A look at the surface of the ground shows the fact that there is a sewer there.

Mr. TELLER. I know where the sewer is very well.

Mr. MANDERSON. And it is proven beyond peradventure that that sewer, which is the bed of the Tiber Creek, starts in at one end of the lot, 40 feet from the corner, and makes its exit on the other side of the lot, 200 feet away.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can find out without the least trouble, if he will, that that sewer for most of its distance is through solid ground, and not the character of ground of which he speaks. I am assured by those who ought to know that there is no question that the Government would take no part of the filled ground by this proposed purchase.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will again state that the testimony of the Senator from Colorado does not agree with the testimony which has been given to me by men not interested in this matter, who have lived in that section of the city all their lives. I will leave the matter there. I think an exploration of that lot will determine the correctness of the suggestion I make, and that the contention that that is solid ground will not hold. That is my opinion.

In advocacy of the proposition I have submitted to the Senate, I think we ought to be governed to a very considerable extent in the construction of a workshop by the testimony of practical men, men who have knowledge such as we can not possibly have in reference to a matter of this kind; and I think we ought to be somewhat swayed in our views by the fact that the late Public Printer, Mr. Palmer, that his foreman of printing, Mr. Brian, who still holds that responsible position, and, as I understand, the present Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, have all given it as their opinion that it will be a matter of economy to the Government and of good business judgment if the present plant is preserved, additional ground purchased, and the necessary new buildings constructed.

I say those practical men, men who have to do with the affairs of the Government Printing Office, in opposition to the judgment of Senators, have given it as their opinion that the amendment which I have offered, or something looking in that direction, ought to be adopted.

A good deal of stress has been laid in former debates, and the suggestion has been made to-day, upon the necessity of having a location where railroad cars can be run into the Printing Office. I think I have heretofore pointed out—and I have done it upon the basis of some practical knowledge of the printing business—that nothing more disastrous could happen to a great establishment of this kind than the running of railroad trains and locomotives into close proximity with a printing office.

Smoke and dust would destroy more white paper than the saving to the Government possibly could be. I venture to say there is not a printing house on the face of the earth where a railroad train or a locomotive is permitted to run directly into the establishment. I do not think any Public Printer would, if his opinion were asked, allow such a thing to happen in the event of having either a new printing house or having the present plant enlarged.

A good deal of discussion has been had upon the matter of the economy to the Government resulting from having a railroad track run into the Printing House. At best this could only be the case as to one railroad, and that would be the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. A very small percentage of the freight coming to the Government Printing Office comes over that railroad, and unless we propose to give that road a monopoly in some way of the carriage to and from the Printing Office, but a small percentage of the freight would be carried by that corporation. A large amount of the supplies of the Government Printing Office comes by water, and a still larger percentage come over the great Pennsylvania Railroad.

But as a matter of fact, and it is susceptible of the amplest demonstration and proof, if every pound of freight put into the Government Printing House could be carried over one road and delivered by a railroad running directly into the office, it would not save a dollar to the Government of the United States. Paper is bought by the pound. It is bought so closely that no saving could be made in the matter of freight, and it is idle for us to waste time in discussing the saving that would come to the Government by having a railroad track running into the Printing House.

There are many more observations which might be made on this question. It is a very important matter, and I have a good deal of feeling about it. I have no interest in any one of these lots in any way. I am glad to say that I have no friends pressing them upon my attention. Neither the Mahone lot nor the lot advocated by the Senator from Nebraska has been presented to me by any man who is urgent to sell land. Hence my judgment is not swayed by any such consideration.

I do not know how persistent the owners of these lots may be. I think they have a right to be persistent and to sell their property to the Government at a fair profit if they can get the Congress of the United States to purchase it, but in opposition to their interests and in opposition to their persistency, if it exists, I present in the amendment that I propose to offer a practical solution of this question which has the indorsement of practical men, and which, in my judgment, whether it will be or not, ought to be adopted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, there is probably no matter of local interest which has been so often and so fully discussed in the Senate as the question of the selection of a site for the Printing Office, but in all the discussion one thing has always been agreed to by every member of the Senate and by every person who is familiar with the subject-matter. That is, that there is an absolute necessity pressing upon us to remove the Public Printing Office from the present building whether the present site is kept or not.

The present building is totally unfit for human occupation, permanently or temporarily. It is a wreck, built in the beginning very feebly, and is not fit for the purpose. The fact that 2,000 people—men, women, and children—are working there daily in constant fear of their lives ought not to be forgotten when this matter is discussed.

Now, in respect to the sites, I have but very little care or decided opinion. I voted first for the proposition made by the Senator from Nebraska. I am perfectly familiar with both squares of ground in discussion. I trod over the land long before any of the improvements were made.

It seems to me that the same small, meandering creek passed through both pieces. It came down in the Mahone lot, from the rear or east end, fifty to two hundred feet probably from the east end, leaving in front of it, however, five or six hundred feet in depth, and 270 feet in width, I think, upon which to build the Printing House. The same creek ran through the baseball grounds, and it has been filled up. That it is not so large a piece of ground. I believed in the first place that that was the best place. The Mahone lot, I believe, was not then a competitor. I voted for it with great pleasure, and I have often expressed surprise as to how it came to be defeated. Was there any defect in the title, or what was the cause of the failure to purchase the lot?

Mr. MANDERSON. There was no defect in the title. It was simply because the Mahone lot had more friends.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Mahone lot at first was not a competitor with this lot, and I voted for it with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Mahone lot was a competitor in prospective at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know that. I believe the lot to which I refer is a good one. I believe a proper building could be erected upon it without any trouble. The passage of the creek through it did not materially hurt it. There is plenty of ground left upon which to erect a building.

The necessity for action by the Senate is, I think, imperative. I am utterly opposed to the adoption of the present site for either a new structure or an addition to the old building. It is too crowded. The whole square is occupied, and in order to occupy the part that is proposed the Government would have to tear down a number of buildings which are now occupied by families. It is in a crowded part of the city, on the corner of H and North Capitol streets. It is totally unfit for a Public Printing Office building, which ought to be entirely detached.

There ought to be at least from sixty to one hundred feet on every side of the Printing Office, separating it from any other building that could possibly be erected by anybody. The old building is scarcely worth tearing down. The foundations are feeble, the walls are cracked, the building is poor. I speak of the old part of the building.

I merely rose to say that I am familiar with the sites, and that I shall vote for the proposition now made by the committee. It is now placed upon the bill, and the matter can be acted upon and concluded.

If any other proposition is made it will open a wide field of controversy. If the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is agreed to by the House of Representatives we will have a certainty that in a short time we shall have a public building where the printing may be safely done and where the lives of our employés will not be constantly endangered. I shall therefore vote against any amendment to the proposition of the committee and shall vote for the committee's amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words only in addition to what I have already stated, rather in reply to one or two suggestions which have been made than for any other purpose. I think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], in whose excellent business judgment I usually repose great confidence, is entirely mistaken in his idea that it would not be advantageous to have a railway track enter the grounds of the Public Printing Office. No one has ever proposed that any railroad should run through it, with its rushing trains and noisy locomotives, to the disturbance of the employés.

The proposition is simply that between the buildings that shall be erected, the Government Printing Office on the one side and the storage houses upon the other, there shall be tracks over which cars may run for the purpose of bringing in materials and taking out the finished product.

No private manufacturing establishment anywhere in the country places its plant where railroad tracks can not reach it, if it is possible to have them reach it.

Undoubtedly, with the requirement of all contractors for paper and other material that the delivery shall be at the Public Printing Office, there would be a great saving upon that enormous amount of material—tons and tons of leather, paper, etc. Many, many, carloads must annually be delivered there either by immediate delivery from the cars or else by haul by wagon to the Public Printing Office, and if the haul by wagon can be saved by the contractors and they can deliver their materials in the car direct to the Printing Office, their bids for paper and other materials will be that much lower.

Senators should not underestimate the vast amount of money that is paid out every year for the transportation of books printed and bound for distribution to the public, the blank books and the stationery supplies which are carted by wagons from the Public Printing Office. If a railway track ran in there the mail cars could run in, and instead of the books being brought up here to the Capitol, to fill every vacant space that can be occupied by them, instead of its being necessary for us to build warehouses adjoining the Maltby Building and running the risk of bringing that building down about our ears by the load of books, the mail cars could take out that which is for distribution and pass the books anywhere about the country.

It is absurd to say that any railroad would have a monopoly. Cars for the Government Printing Office and cars sent from the office to go over any railroad could be switched upon any of the tracks that enter the city, whether the Pennsylvania or the Baltimore and Ohio.

I do not understand that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is advocating in any respect the Mahone lot. His objection is to any new lot whatever, and he urges as against any new lot the lack of necessity for railroad facilities to adjoin the building. It seems to me that is a prime necessity, and it is that which is urged here in favor of a new place.

So far as concerns the Public Printer and the gentleman who has recently occupied that office, I know of my own knowledge, from conversation had with Public Printer Palmer and reports made by him and from the present Public Printer, that they would greatly prefer a new site for a building rather than the patching up of the old one; but they say, "If we can not get a new site; if that is impossible, then, for Heaven's sake, go on and better the existing condition and make the present building safe for life and limb."

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know that I am correct in this matter, and I should like some information, which I presume the Senator from Nebraska can give me. I desire to ask the Senator if there is in existence a recent letter from the present Public Printer asking the enlargement of the existing plant?

Mr. MANDERSON. There is such a letter, advocating it; but I say that the present Public Printer would greatly prefer a properly located lot and the construction of an entirely new Public Printing Office building.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has he so stated?

Mr. MANDERSON. He does not underestimate, as does the Senator from New Hampshire, the advantage of having railroad facilities for the new plant.

Mr. President, as regards the respective merits of the two lots, the Mahone and the baseball lot, my recollection is very clear as to the history of this matter. My neighbor, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], seems to have forgotten the facts. It is true that in the first instance, when the matter was first before the Senate, the Mahone lot had not made its appearance in public.

It, however, was in private view, and when the Committee on Printing, following the conclusion which had been arrived at by the commission composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Architect of the Capitol, and the Public Printer, made their report in favor of the baseball lot, there came from the friends of the purchase of the Mahone lot a resolution requiring the Committee on Printing to make investigation as to whether the baseball lot had sufficient foundation for the buildings required to be erected upon it. Before that committee there appeared an attorney, representing Gen. Mahone, who was permitted to cross-examine the witnesses who were brought forward, and a vigorous attack was made upon the baseball lot, because it was claimed it would not afford sufficient foundation for the public buildings.

I have here the report of the Committee on Printing made in February, 1891. Just think of it! Away back prior to that time we commenced this controversy, and for about six years we have been wrangling over the question as to which is the best lot. Of course it is every man's right to insist upon that which he thinks is the best, and I am simply availing myself of that right and that privilege. But I believe I know something of this matter. I have explored it in every way. There is no lot which has been offered that I have not personally visited. There is no witness among the hundreds of witnesses who have been examined whom I have not personally examined, and the report is here.

There can be no question as to the fact. It is exactly as the Senator from Ohio states it. Tiber Creek at one time ran through both of these lots. It does not follow that because it did so those lots will not give sufficient foundation. There was a creek running through the site of the present Pension Building. That enormous structure is built upon a foundation which had to rest upon that sort of ground. It is so stated here in the testimony of Gen. Meigs. I will state facts as to the Mahone lot. Through that lot, commencing at one side, the south side, 40 feet from the east corner, the old creek entered, and it made its exit on the north side, 200 feet from the corner.

There is no question about that. It appears fully by all the plans and plats which have been made. It was admitted by the Senator from Missouri and practically admitted by the Senator from South Carolina in a former debate upon this question, and about it there can be no controversy. It does not follow that because of that fact there could not be sufficient footing found. You can go to the necessary depth, but the obstacle in the way is that replacing the old creek through the Mahone lot there is now one of the main sewers of the city of Washington, which would have to be disturbed if this part of the lot were to be built upon.

Now, as to the baseball lot. Tiber Creek ran through a small part of the corner. It did not run across the lot, but cut diagonally across one corner of it. When the attack was made upon the foundation facilities of this lot testimony was taken, and I have here the volume containing it. No builder, no architect, no engineer gave testimony before that committee that the lot would not afford sufficient foundation for the buildings which it was proposed to erect upon it. On the contrary, Mr. Entwistle, who is inspector of buildings in the District of Columbia, not only made a personal and cursory examination of the lot, but pits were dug (my recollection is, there were some eight or ten in number) going down through that part of the lot which had been filled to the original earth. He swears that there is no trouble about the foundation for the buildings.

Q. Do you think there is anything in this block, in the character of its filling, or its situation in any regard, that would prevent its carrying in safety buildings such as described, with proper foundations?

A. In building there it would be necessary to go down to the original earth, as I stated before. If you go down to the original earth it will carry any structure.

Q. In your opinion would piling be necessary in any part?

A. Not at all. A good concrete foundation there of sufficient width would carry any structure you could put on it.

There is pretty good expert testimony. I pass over the testimony of some other practical builders and architects, and go to the testimony of Mr. Bernard R. Green, who is the constructing architect of the Library Building. He swears that he has given very thorough exploration in regard to this lot, and says:

I have had only general knowledge of the locality and its previous topography until within two or three days, when I was asked to make an examination of some test pits that had been sunk on the lot in question, with a view to getting an idea of the condition of the strata there, and its capability of supporting the foundations of a heavy building.

Then he goes on to describe in detail each one of these pits and what he found, and declares that it is a gravel foundation—very much like the gravel strata that we find in other parts of the city. A very similar stratum was found in excavating for the Congressional Library building over here on the hill.

Q. Did you see any evidences of quicksand beds or pits in any part of this lot?

A. No, sir; I did not.

He goes on at great length here to declare that the lot is sufficient to carry any building that may be placed upon it; that practically it is as good a foundation as that which is under the great Library Building on top of the hill. But we were not content with that. We took the testimony of Edward Clark, the Architect of the Capitol, a man of great experience in matters of this sort; and he declares—I shall not take time to read any part of his testimony—that the lot is perfectly safe in that regard. We called in that noted expert Gen. Meigs, and I well remember that when that old man, but a few weeks, perhaps a few months before his death, came before the committee.

He said he had gone to examine the lot. I referred to him in debate upon this subject before, stating the fact that he was the architect and builder of the immense structure the Pension Office Building, and known in connection with other great works. I think I even went so far, at that time, as to give him the credit by mistake for having replaced the foundation under the Washington Monument. I was in error in that regard, having for the moment confounded him with that other great architect in whom we confide, and very properly confide, Gen. Casey, the Chief of Engineers of the Army of the United States. Gen. Meigs testified that he had examined the pits, and found that there was no trouble whatever about the lot.

So the statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is not supported by the evidence which has been taken with such great care in this case. I have no question that either of these lots, with the appliances that are used as foundations by builders, would support any building that might be put upon them. My objection to the Mahone lot is because of its distance in the first place; second, because I think the price proposed to be paid for it is too large; third, because it has not the proper shape on which to place the buildings that I think should be placed upon it; and next, because we are quite likely to find it left to one side by the change of railroads that is anticipated.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he can not buy any property in that vicinity for anything like the price which it is proposed to take for this property. I have had occasion in another matter to look at the price of property in that neighborhood, and I found that no land could be bought in that neighborhood, or still farther out, for less than $2 a foot. As to the shape, the Government can make it practically any shape it chooses.

Mr. MANDERSON. I made no personal inquiry as to the price, but I remember very well that the Johnson lot, which adjoins it and is to its east and nearer the Capitol, was offered at a very much less price per foot, and I think it could still be purchased for the same price.

I shall not detain the Senate further upon this matter. As I say, I am anxious for results. I will certainly vote against the Mahone lot whenever an opportunity affords for the abundant reasons which I have given. I hope the Senate will return to the original proposition in this regard, and that is the purchase of the baseball lot.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this is an old, vexed question. It has been before Congress for a half dozen years, and ought to have been settled long ago. We ought to have a good, clean, spacious, commodious, conveniently situated printing building built all running to-day, but the trouble has been that the Senate has always been for the Mahone lot, and the committees which have investigated the subject have been first for one and then for another, and nobody could tell what would be done by any committee having charge of the matter.

The reason to-day why the Senate committee have put this provision for the purchase of the Mahone lot upon the bill and hope to get it through is that the necessity for a good, large, convenient public printing building has been growing every year. The Committee on Appropriations felt that if they did not put this provision on and make the effort this Congress would slip by and nothing would be done and we would be no further on than we are now.

That is the truth of the matter, Mr. President. The persistency has not been with those who are for the Mahone lot. The persistency has been in the one committee and the other, which has first been for some lot and then for some other lot against the Mahone lot.

Otherwise the Senate would have had its way long ago. Whenever there has been a chance to vote upon the matter the Senate has been in favor of the Mahone lot. The reason why it has not been purchased is not because there is anything covert about it; it is not because there is anything in the way of the mysterious or the indefinable, or anything that should not be presented. Senators who have been out and looked at all the lots, who have considered the advantages and disadvantages, come back in favor of the Mahone lot. If to-day there are six new Senators in this body who have never seen one of these lots and never heard anything about them, and they will go out and get into carriages and drive first to one and then to another and see the size, the elevation, the convenience of access, the streets that open into them, everyone will come back in favor of the Mahone lot.

The price also is most reasonable. Taken in connection with the other lot, there is no comparison whatever. One great advantage over and above all (and I do not know that it has been alluded to) is that it is in a tract where it is convenient for the workmen who are there, and who do their work there, to live and own and lease or buy or build little cottages. That can not be said of any of the other lots. It is on the best of ground, high and healthful, with clear, broad streets opening in every direction. It is all covered by what I have said, that if any unprejudiced Senator will go and look at different lots he will come back and say that the place to put this printing-house building is right down on the Mahone lot. That is why I am for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to strike out the amendment of the committee and insert.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the pending amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is to strike out what is known as the Mahone lot and insert the Johnson lot. Did I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to propose an amendment?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is not now in order.

Mr. CULLOM. It will come in after the pending amendment to the amendment of the committee is disposed of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that my amendment will likewise be in the nature of a substitute for the original proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will your amendment be?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be to strike out and insert likewise.

Mr. COCKRELL. But to insert what place?

Mr. GALLINGER. The present printing house site.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I wanted to know. I am in favor of the present site. I believe it by far the most eligible, the most economical, and the most advantageous in every respect. I shall therefore be compelled to vote against the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska as well as the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask for a yea-and-nay vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I therefore abstain from voting. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. WASHBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New Jersey has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with that Senator and withhold my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Louisiana has not voted.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. PATTON (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Maryland has not voted.

Mr. PATTON. I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. PALMER. I ask if the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from North Dakota has not voted.

Mr. PALMER. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. BERRY. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] and myself will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 34; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment which I ask to have read. I move to strike out the amendment of the committee and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the amendment of the committee and insert:

That the sum of $250,000, to provide accommodation for the Government Printing Office and the construction of the needed storage and distribution warehouses in connection therewith, in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved August 30, 1890, and suspended by act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, approved March 3, 1891, is hereby made available for the purposes provided for in the above act approved August 30, 1890; and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay out of this sum an amount sufficient to purchase such portion of square numbered 624, contiguous to the present Government Printing Office, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Public Printer may deem neccessary for the needs of the Government Printing Office: Provided, That the amount shall not exceed the amount of the said $250,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CAREY. I understand the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] proposes to buy additional land at the present site for a printing-house building.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. CAREY. Being upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I visited the various places which were offered to the Government, including the present site, and anyone having a practical idea of such matters who will visit the Public Printing Office will, I think, pronounce it an unfit place for workmen, or for printers, or for anybody else. It is an unsafe building. The Government owns at that point only 58,884 feet of ground. Now, it is proposed to purchase there 52,623 feet of ground. The Public Printer reports that that additional ground will cost, anyway, $175,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that I understand options have been taken upon every foot of that ground at a price not to exceed in any instance $3 a foot, including improvements.

Mr. CAREY. It makes the cost one hundred and seventy-four thousand and some odd dollars. Now, it is proposed that we shall enter upon an unbusinesslike scheme and buy 52,000 feet of ground for $175,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. How can that be? Fifty-two thousand feet at $3 a foot would not cost $175,000. My mathematics do not agree with that statement.

Mr. CAREY. I did not make the calculation. The Senator made the calculation. I gave the gross amount. It will cost $175,000 to get this ground.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not for 52,000 feet.

Mr. CAREY. For 52,000 feet. The present site at the same value stripped of its buildings is worth $195,000. With the purchase of this additional ground we shall have only 111,000 feet at the present site, and the value of the site will be $370,000 before we commence to erect the additional building. To get a proper building on that ground, considering the room that is necessary, it must be anywhere from five to ten stories high, as we shall only have 111,000 feet.

We are told that there is an emergency, and that we must have the building quickly. I find there is only an emergency when somebody wants to sell a lot, and when somebody has some particular scheme to rush through this body. We discussed this question on the 21st of last February. Any business man who wants to build a factory or business house would have bought the ground and erected a suitable building for the Public Printer long since, but under a motion to reconsider, after this body had voted to purchase the Mahone lot, the question has remained dead until the Appropriations Committee have properly taken the matter up again and urged its consideration by the Senate of the United States.

Now, what is it proposed to do at the present site? It is proposed to spend $107,000 for an additional building. I ask any man in this body to just think what you will have after you spend $107,000. Will you have a building in which you are willing to risk four or five thousand men who are compelled to work in the Public Printing Office? That building may be useful for some purposes, but it will not be useful as a public printing establishment. If we take the Mahone site (and, after examining all the property offered, I do not believe the Mahone site is the best) we get 213,000 feet of ground for $250,000.

We get nearly double the ground that we would have at the present Public Printing Office, and at a cost of $250,000, when the Government needs the ground, while the 111,000 feet of ground where the Public Printing House stands at present will cost the Government $370,000, assuming that we can sell the ground we now own there at the same price we propose to buy adjacent ground.

The Mahone lot contains 213,000 square feet of ground. I think if the Appropriation Committee had done a wise thing, desiring to purchase the Mahone property, it would have reported in favor of the purchase of the entire square—not half of the lot, but the entire block. If we consider the comfort and safety of those who work in the public buildings, I do not believe we should extend the building higher than three stories.

We can buy this ground and erect upon it a building not over three stories high, and if we do not want to use all that ground, we can retain what we do not build upon for some other purposes, or for the extension of the printing house building site in the future. The block across from the Baltimore and Ohio depot will cost, on the basis that the other House has proposed to pay for the ground, $430,000 before you get grade.

As I said before, I believe, after examination, that the Duddington or Carroll site is the best site for a public printing office, leaving out of consideration the interests of the employés of the Public Printing Office. I do not deny that that is a very important consideration:

It is claimed by those who are acquainted with the Public Printing Office that many hundreds of the employés own their own homes in the vicinity of the present Printing Office, but I understand that either the Mahone site or the site that was proposed by the Senator from Nebraska would be convenient for the employés who are at present located about the Public Printing Office. The Carroll or Duddington site contains 212,000 feet, being as much ground within a thousand feet as the half block known as the Mahone lot, which it is proposed to buy. It can be purchased for $200,000, and has some valuable improvements in the way of modern houses built upon one side, there being at present sufficient ground left for the purpose of the Government so far as any demands for the present are concerned.

This block of ground fortunately has no sewer running through it. It is not made ground on any portion of it. Over 20 feet have been excavated from it. It is down on hardpan or gravel, which I understand is very suitable ground upon which to erect heavy buildings. The Mahone lot is 45 feet above tide water; the present site is 27 feet above tidewater; the Carroll square is 64 feet above tide water.

As to the distances, the Carroll property is 2,600 feet from the Capitol; the present Printing Office site is 2,400 feet from the Capitol; the Mahone lot is 4,900 feet from the Capitol; the Kurtz-Johnson lot is 5,300 feet from the Capitol; and the Baltimore and Ohio depot site is 1,000 feet from the Capitol.

This is all I desire to say about the location of the Public Printing Office.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a word before the vote is taken. It is very refreshing to have the Senator from Wyoming, in opposition to the opinion of the late accomplished Public Printer, the present Public Printer, and the exceedingly accomplished foreman of printing, say that the present plant ought to be enlarged, and that it would be good economy for the Government to do it. I say it is very refreshing to have the opinion of the Senator from Wyoming in opposition to these practical men when he says that it is unfit for the Government Printing House in any emergency.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he ever talked with Gen. Palmer on the subject? I did, and Gen. Palmer said it would be better to take the present site and fix it up if we can not get a new building elsewhere. I understand that in the report made he wanted a new site purchased. Am I not correct about that, I ask the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. MANDERSON. That is correct.

Mr. CAREY. It is only in the event that a new site could not be obtained, being urged by the great demands for increased accommodation and for safety, that he recommended the expenditure of money immediately at the present site.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator's statement does not change the fact that he said the present site is unfit for a printing house. The opinion of every practical man is in opposition to the opinion of the Senator from Wyoming so far as that contention goes. There is no reason why the present site is not just as good a site. No reason has been shown why, geographically and so far as the character and soil are concerned, and so far as the healthfulness of the location is concerned, it is not just as good a site as any other that has been proposed.

I think that the Senator from Wyoming made a slight mistake in regard to the area the Government now owns. My impression is that, including an alley which will be made available without cost to the Government, the area is considerably larger than was stated by the Senator. I am sure that in regard to the cost of the purchase of 52,000 feet of additional land he has not accurate figures on that point when he says it will cost $176,000.

Both the Senator from Wyoming and the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] have said with a great deal of emphasis that the present printing house is not fit to be occupied, and that we ought not to consider a proposition to add to the plant. Nobody quarrels with those Senators on that point. We all know that if this appropriation is made that old building will be pulled down. Nobody is arguing that it should continue to be occupied. Hence, the contention on that point made by the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Wyoming has no effect whatever on this controversy.

But the fact should not be lost sight of that in addition to the old building, which ought to be and will be destroyed, the Government owns to-day fireproof buildings of modern construction which are just as good as can be built at the present time, which, including other improvements that will have to be put in if we get a new site, may be properly valued at nearly $300,000, which will be saved to the Government if the amendment which I have offered shall prevail. It is not a question as to whether the old building shall be preserved; nobody expects that to be done, but it is a question whether the Government is going to throw away deliberately perhaps a quarter of a million dollars in improvements that are now made for the purpose of going two or three squares farther away to purchase a site for a printing house.

Allusion has been made to the employés who have their little homes in that part of the city. I think that is worthy of consideration, and any argument which may be made on that point has greater force as applied to the present site than to any other. Those men have bought their little homes around the present printing house. They have a value because of their contiguity to that great establishment and because of the convenience they afford to those poor men. It would be a hardship to remove the printing house a very great distance from the present site, so far as those poor men are concerned.

Mr. President, this is all I care to say. I have no disposition to prolong this controversy. There is no Senator who has a greater desire to have a printing house constructed either upon the existing site or some other site than myself. In season and out of season, covering a period of nearly four years, I have called attention to the insecure condition of the present printing house. I have said in language as emphatic as I could command that we are guilty of a crime in permitting twenty-five hundred or three thousand human beings to be employed in a structure such as the present printing house.

I want to see that old building torn down and new buildings constructed. If it can not be done on the present site I want to see it done elsewhere. I shall reserve the right to vote for or against any other proposition that may be presented to Congress if the amendment which I have offered shall not be adopted, as I trust it may be adopted.

I will close my observations with a single further remark: The Senator from Ohio tells us that if we go out and purchase the so-called Mahone lot we shall soon have a modern printing house constructed for the uses of the Government. My observation does not justify the conclusion the Senator from Ohio seems to have reached.

I have, month in and month out, year in and year out, in riding up Pennsylvania avenue, watched the progress of the new post-office building for the city of Washington. It has not come soon, and the Lord only knows when it will ever come to give relief to the people here. I believe that economy, I believe that speedy relief from the existing conditions will best be found in enlarging the present plant, and I trust that the Senate by a majority vote will agree with me on that proposition.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the letter of Gen. Palmer, which I hold in my hand:

In reply—

He says—

I have to state that options have been secured, covering ground facing North Capitol and G streets, which, added to that already owned by the United States on G street, will equal the area of the present Government Printing Office site. This ground, comprising about 54,000 square feet, is shown by the blue tint on the accompanying drawing, and is offered, with all the improvements thereon, for the sum of $175,000.

The Architect of the Capitol estimates that to construct on this ground, to meet immediate necessities, a five-story building, 60 by 175 feet——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, can he point out any objection to a five-story building for a printing house? Has the Senator seen the printing houses in Chicago, New York, and Boston? Can there be any objection to a five-story building?

Mr. CAREY. I do not believe in putting up a printing house in a crowded neighborhood in this city, where ground is abundant. There are reasons of health as well as reasons of safety, and there is economy in the handling of material in having a lower building.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is there any objection to a five-story printing house?

Mr. CAREY. There certainly is when you need not have one higher than three stories. High buildings are not constructed where ground is plenty and where it is cheap.

The Architect of the Capitol estimates that to construct on this ground, to meet immediate necessities, a five-story building, 60 by 175 feet, fronting on North Capitol street, will cost $107,000, and for a six-story building, having the same ground dimensions, $126,000. It seems now that they were not even satisfied that a five-story building would be sufficient to accommodate the work in that building. The Public Printer says:

I respectfully recommend that this ground be purchased, and a six-story building, 60 by 175 feet, fronting on North Capitol street, be erected. Such a building will afford floor space equal to seven-eighths of that of the H street wing of the present building. This building, it is believed, will give immediate relief, and at a future time Congress can make an appropriation to erect a building on the remainder of the ground thus purchased.

Should this purchase be made the total area of the Government Printing Office site will then be 115,246 square feet. There should be added to this 12,533 square feet, covered by two alleys, one 30 feet wide, running east and west, and the other 14 feet wide, running from the 30-foot alley south to G street.

So it is proposed to cover up two alleys in that neighborhood for the sake of getting more ground.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will not do any harm to build up higher.

Mr. CAREY. The letter of Gen. Palmer explains the proposition.

Mr. HUNTON. I am very glad that the first part of the committee amendment under consideration has been adopted. A due regard to the lives of the Government employés absolutely requires that a sufficient sum of money should be appropriated to make the present Government Printing Office safe and human life a little more endurable to those who work in it.

In regard to the second part of the amendment, I wish to say that no amendment that has been brought before the Senate meets my entire approbation. My judgment is, and my desire is, that every public building to be erected in the city of Washington should be located on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue. The land is cheap there; and unless the Government locates its public buildings on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue that portion of the city will continue to go down, and the finest avenue in the world will be destroyed.

If I had my way, Mr. President, I should locate every public building, this among them, upon the south side of Pennsylvania avenue; but my views upon this subject do not meet with the approval of many of the Senators around me, and therefore I have to select between the other sites which have been brought before the Senate by the various amendments proposed.

I do not like the committee amendment, because it will take three years at least, and a large outlay of money, to erect a Government Printing Office upon the Mahone lot or the Johnson lot, and neither of those sites would be as convenient as is the present Printing Office.

Therefore I am not in favor of purchasing either the Mahone lot or the Johnson lot for the purpose of putting a new Printing Office upon either of those lots, but if I can not get the Government Printing Office located on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, then I desire to see the present site utilized for the purpose of making a sightly, safe, and commodious place for conducting the public printing of the Government.

While Gen. Palmer was the Public Printer I went to the Printing Office and had a long interview with him on the subject. He satisfied me that that was the most feasible plan to get a good, safe Printing Office in a short time. He said—and Senators know that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported the same thing—that in one year's time a new building could be erected on the present location of the Government Printing Office, and gradually the old buildings could be torn down and new ones take their places.

We all know that Gen. Palmer was a man of fine sense and fine judgment, a very conservative, safe man; and he satisfied me that if we had to take the old Printing Office site or the Mahone lot or the Johnson lot, it was better, in every view of the case, that we should take the present Printing Office site, because it was cheaper to the Government, and a safe public building could be erected on the present site at a cost of about $100,000 in the course of a year, while nothing could be done to house the employés in the Printing Office at a new location under three years.

I think, if we desert the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, the best thing that can be done for an early and safe housing of the employés of the Government Printing Office is to utilize the present site by enlarging it a little by condemnation or purchase, and erecting, first, a new building upon the part purchased or condemned, and then gradually replacing the old buildings by new ones; and in the course of a year we shall have a public building there that will make the Government Printing Office not only safe to the employés, but a hundred fold more endurable as a place in which to do their work.

It is for these reasons, Mr. President, not being able to get my first selection on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, that I shall vote for improving and utilizing the present lot according to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to make a correction in the bill. I ask the Senate to return to page 43, to the amendment in relation to the World's Columbian Exposition, which I had passed over. The amounts as reported from the State Department were: Exhibitors' claims, $10,194.50; French Government claims, $60,661.40; making a total of $70,885.90. I propose to change the $70,000 to $71,000, so that it will cover the amount of the claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 24, page 43, strike out "seventy" and insert "seventy-one;" so as to read "$71,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to make another correction. At the foot of page 19, after the words "Revised Statutes," I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk. It becomes necessary in consequence of the stamps being printed at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 24, on page 19, it is proposed to insert:

For rental of office for the agent of the Post-Office Department to supervise the distribution of stamps by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, $200; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to rent suitable rooms for such office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 135, after line 21, to insert:

That the Joint Committee on Printing, as soon as such site shall be acquired, shall cause to be prepared the requisite plans for a Government printing establishment, fireproof all the way, which shall be fully equal to the prompt and efficient performance of the work now required by the Government, and such plans to be so arranged as to admit of progressive extensions, as the growing demand upon the establishment may, from time to time, require; and for the preparation of such plans the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 136, after line 11, to insert as a new section the following:

COTTON STATES AND INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT ATLANTA, GA.

SEC. 3. That for the expense of the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, care, and return of articles and materials to comprise an exhibit illustrative of the functions of the Government of the United States, to be made at the Cotton States and International Exposition, to be held in the city of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, in the year 1895, of which not exceeding $5,000 may be expended for clerical services, $150,000, to be disbursed by the board created by section 16 of the act approved April 25, 1890, entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, and sea, in the city of Chicago, in the State of Illinois;" and the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the said board are hereby extended to include the said exhibit at the Cotton States and International Exposition, under all the provisions of law which governed the Government exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition: Provided, That the foregoing sum shall be apportioned among the several Departments, the Smithsonian Institution, and the Fish Commission, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and such apportionment shall be final and shall be so made by him as not to create a deficiency, and shall cover every expenditure on the part of the United States, except as hereinafter provided.

For taking down the Government main building erected for the Government exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition, and its transportation, or so much of the material thereof as may be available, and its reërection upon the site selected for the said Cotton States and International Exposition, including the purchase of such new material as may be found necessary, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That if it be found impracticable to take down, transport, and reërect said building for the sum herein appropriated, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a new building to be erected upon said site of the Cotton States and International Exhibition, for the Government exhibit, at a cost not to exceed $50,000, for which purpose the amount herein appropriated is hereby made available: Provided further, That the United States shall not be in any manner responsible for the conduct or management of said exhibition, nor shall it be liable in any manner for any sum on account of the erection of any buildings for the Cotton States and International Exposition, or for the expenses of the officers or employés thereof, or for any expenses incident to or growing out of said exposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. Unless there are some further amendments to be proposed by the committee, in addition to those which have been acted upon, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to offer an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Missouri to an amendment passed over on page 3.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we pass from the amendment just agreed to, I think for safety that in line 15, on page 137, the words "including the return of said exhibits" should be added.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 137, line 15, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert the words "including the return of said exhibits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment on page 3, beginning in line 19, was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], who informs me that he does not desire any change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is agreed to, I ask the Senator from Missouri, in charge of the bill, to allow what I send to the desk to be read as a substitute, limiting the cost of these buildings. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read. This, I understand, is offered as a substitute for the other amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment reported by the committee, on page 3, after line 20, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure by purchase or otherwise suitable sites, and for the commencement of the construction of public buildings thereon, in the city of Cheyenne, the capital of Wyoming; in Boise City, the capital of Idaho; in the city of Helena, the capital of Montana, and in the city of Spokane, Wash., there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000. Each of said sites shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the buildings to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet; and neither of said sites shall cost in excess of $25,000, and neither of said buildings, each of which shall be fireproof, shall cost, including the site, in excess of $150,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment which has been passed over, to which the Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Missouri, on page 87.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the amendment on page 87 is now before the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. VILAS. Was the first amendment, beginning with the last line on the bottom of page 86 and on the top of page 87, formally agreeed to, so that it requires to be reserved in the Senate, or can it be considered now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be reserved when we go into the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. Can not we dispose of it it as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and can not be reached except by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. VILAS. I understood it was the general statement of the distinguished chairman of the committee, that while these amendments were agreed to formally, if there were any votes which were desired to be reconsidered, they could be formally reconsidered. If that can be done in the Senate, however, I do not care to press the question now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated at the time that the amendment being agreed to it could only be reached by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have the floor and merely yielded for an inquiry.

Mr. VILAS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I move in line 21, the first line of the amendment, to strike out the words "military records such as."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 21, on page 87, after the words "that the," it is proposed to strike out "military records, such as;" so as to read:

That the muster and pay rolls, discharges, and reports relating to the field operations of the Army, of the Revolutionary war, and of the war of 1812, now in any of the Executive Departments, shall be transferred to the Secretary of War to be preserved, indexed, and properly prepared for convenient reference and use.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. The committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. Then I shall say nothing about it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I have a further amendment. I move after the word "use," in the second line on page 88, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That whenever the head of any Department shall deem the retention of any such records in his Department essential to the convenient transaction of the business thereof, he may direct copies of such records to be transmitted to the War Department in lieu of the originals.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like, notwithstanding the acceptance by the Senator from Missouri of the amendment, to state in one moment the reason for the amendment.

A great many of these military records which are in the State Department have come from the private papers of distinguished officers or other persons in public life, military or civil, during the Revolutionary war; muster rolls have come from the custody of the regimental and other officers to whom the reports were made. They are connected very often with family papers which have been purchased by the Government or given to the Government.

There is a very full and elaborate bulletin published of all these records, so that all the historical investigators of the country now go to that valuable State Department library in pursuit of such studies. A great many of them are inextricably connected with other documents and ought not to be separated. When anything is wanted for the completion of a record necessary to a military history, I do not think there ought to be any objection to sending to the War Department. I wish to say that I have received a communication of great alarm in relation to this matter from one of the most distinguished historical investigators of the country, Mr. Worthington C. Ford, who is a high officer of the Government and who understands this subject better than anybody else. It is, however, quite important that where these papers are connected with others, or are needed for the service of the different Departments, copies shall be sent and not the originals.

I put this statement on record so that if the matter comes up in conference the Senator from Missouri will have it for reference.

Mr. COCKRELL. The object is simply to have papers which are now scattered in the Pension Office, in the Treasury Department, and in the State Department, which pertain to the names, individual facts, and services of soldiers in the Revolutionary war and the war of 1812 placed in the War Department, indexed and carded, just as are the rolls of the last volunteer army, so that we can go there and get the military history of any man who was in the war of 1812 or in the Revolutionary war as readily as we can go and get the definition of a word in a dictionary. As the records are now they are utterly useless.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move one other amendment, to add at the end of the amendment what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the amendment just adopted:

Said records shall be open to the public under such reasonable regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On page 129, after line 10, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 129, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

The assistant librarian in charge of the Law Library shall be paid the sum of $1,600 for his salary, and $480 for laborer's services.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 7, on page 44.

The SECRETARY. On page 44, after line 7, insert:

That James D. McBride be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have engraved, on stone or wood, true and fac simile copies of the seal of the Supreme Court of the United States, the seal of the United States, the seal of the Senate of the United States, the seal of the House of Representatives, and the seal of the Department of State, which have been authoritatively affixed to the following documents originating with him, and to print the same on true and fac-simile copies thereof: The Centennial memorial entitled "The Administrators of the United States Government at the beginning of Its Second Century;" also, the Columbian State paper entitled "The Administration of the United States Government at the beginning of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the Discovery of America:" Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as authorizing the said James D. McBride to make, or cause to be made, any die or dies, whereby a copy of the said seals could be printed with raised characters or in relief.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that the amendment carries no appropriation at all, but is merely to confirm a right which this gentleman, Mr. McBride, supposed he already had. It refers to this [exhibiting], which many of the Senators upon the floor have seen, the administrators of the Government from the year 1792, up to the time of the holding of the World's Columbian Exposition. Mr. McBride also secured from Congress the privilege of using the seals at the time of the World's Centennial Exposition in 1876. The chief value of this document consists in having the seals of the various Departments to the fact that these are the genuine signatures of the Senators, Representatives, Cabinet officers, and the President. By joint resolutions of July 18, 1892, and July 22, 1892, Congress authorized the Secretary of State, the clerk of the Supreme Court, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to affix the official seals, attesting the genuineness of the signatures.

All that this man wishes at the present time is that there shall be granted to him the privilege of taking fac-similes of these seals upon paper for use in public schools and libraries for the education of the children and otherwise; and I can not see any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. On page 58, after line 2, I move to add what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 58, insert:

For the purchase, by the Joint Committee on the Library, of Miss Eugenia Shankland's copy of Mr. R. Peal's original portrait of George Washington, $1,500, or as much thereof as may be necessary; and said copy, when purchased, shall be placed in the Vice-President's room in the Capitol.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is the amendment recommended by any committee?

Mr. KYLE. It has the indorsement of the Library Committee in toto.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where is the report?

Mr. KYLE. The amendment was reported from the Library Committee by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator from Indiana had been present here he would have offered the amendment at this time.

I will state that this is a copy, by Miss Shankland, whom many of the Senators know, of Peal's famous painting of Washington. It is the only copy of it ever made. It is now on exhibition in the room of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and is said to be a perfect copy of the original. As the original is fast cracking, perhaps, and is liable to rapidly deteriorate——

Mr. FRYE. It is a good price for a copy——

Mr. KYLE. I think it is wise that the copy should be purchased for use in the room of the Vice-President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senate will not enter upon the purchasing of copies of paintings of anyone, however distinguished the person may be. I therefore hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have sent to the desk an amendment which I ask may be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of page 114 insert:

For acquiring the title to the water power of the Great Falls of the Potomac and such contiguous land as may be needed, by negotiation or purchase, or by proceedings in condemnation, for the purpose of giving additional water supply and electric lighting to the District of Columbia, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and whatever part of said sum may be needed for the purpose may be expended to make the necessary surveys and plans. The appropriation herein provided to be expended by the Secretary of War, who is hereby authorized to carry out the provisions hereof; all titles acquired by the United States to be approved by the Attorney-General.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, by the amendment it is proposed to reach that which I think is of very great importance and would be a matter of very great economy to the District of Columbia. I do not know that the amendment is in the form it should be, but I present it, hoping that it will not be objected to and that no point of order will be raised upon it. I trust it may be allowed to go into conference and that the conferees of the two Houses will put it in proper form and shape.

The Committee on the District of Columbia investigated the subject of the water supply of the city of Washington, and made at this session a report accompanied by a showing from experts, hydraulic engineers, etc., which is of great value. They investigated the power of the Great Falls for the purposes of water supply. They found, and they so report, that certain private corporations are reaching to obtain these falls, the power, and the adjacent land. If that is permitted, and of course it will be done unless the Government of the United States interposes by the exercise of its great power, it simply means that that which necessity will compel us to own we shall have to pay for in a very greatly increased degree from what it can be purchased for now. The committee say:

There are no improvements now at Great Falls, except the aqueduct dam, built and owned by the United States. If the Government is ever to acquire control it should be done before any outlay is made by the other owners. Such outlay must be to them a questionable investment, in view of the fact that the Government is sure to require an increased supply from time to time in the future, thus endangering the business of the power company and destroying or greatly lessening the value of their improvements, with the risk that they may not be sufficiently recompensed. Your committee are therefore of the opinion that all the water and riparian rights at Great Falls necessary for the control and use of the entire power should be acquired at this time; that it will be a wise economy to do so; that ownership in part by the United States and in part by private business corporations is a relation unwise and unsafe for the Government, and should be terminated at once; that the other owners can afford to surrender their rights now on much better terms for the Government than after they have made their improvements, and that no outlay of money can contribute more than this to the future welfare of the Capital of the country.

Early in the present session of Congress I introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War to report to Congress as to the advisability of lighting the District of Columbia by electricity, the power to be furnished by the Great Falls of the Potomac. A few days ago the letter of the Secretary, transmitting a response to that resolution, came to the Senate. It has not yet been printed completely, there being certain maps and plans that are not yet ready for publication, but I have here an advance copy, which I received from the Printing Office, in which the report of these very able electrical experts is given. I confess that I have been greatly delighted with the showing that those gentlemen make.

I might say that the report of Col. Elliot, of the Engineer Corps, Capt. Knight, and their very efficient aid, Col. Reber, of the Signal Corps, has been sanctioned and approved by Gen. Casey, the Chief of Engineers, and by the Secretary of War. They report that the water power at the falls of the Potomac is ample to furnish power for all the electric lighting needed for the District of Columbia, and that it is perfectly feasible to do so. They give quite in detail the amount of water that goes over those falls which is now being wasted.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the power at the average stage of water?

Mr. MANDERSON. I can not turn to it at this moment. I will read their recommendation as to the advisability of the project.

The question—

of the advisability of using the power of the Potomac at Great Falls for the public purposes mentioned in Senator MANDERSON'S resolution depends on the present cost of lighting the public buildings and grounds and the streets of Washington, as compared with the probable cost of lighting under the proposed system, and also on the probable cost of the works required for the latter system and the probable cost of operation.

Then they go on to show that in Chicago the average cost per lamp per year is $96.64; in St. Louis it is $111.12; in Wheeling it is $62 per lamp for four hundred lamps; and in Baltimore it is $127.75. The present yearly charge in the District of Columbia is $182.50. So we are paying far more for the lighting of District lamps than is paid for the lighting of any other city in the United States, probably.

From these figures it is apparent that this city is paying far above the average charge for arc lights, and about double the cost of such lighting to cities owning and operating their own plant. The figures given are based upon the use of steam plant with its expensive coal consumption.

They give $52.33 for the cost of an arc light by the use of the falls per annum, as against $182.50, which we are now paying.

I marked several of the sections here which I desired to quote, but I shall not take the time of the Senate further, except to state the conclusion which the experts have reached and their recommendation. They say:

For the reason that there were no funds provided for the use of the board, none of the surveys required for determining the location of the power canal and power plant at Great Falls that would be required for utilizing for electrical purposes the power of the falls now wasted and the cost of these works could be made.

This cost, the cost of the necessary works in this city and of the line connecting the two systems, will be so considerable that they should not be undertaken before plans have been very carefully and elaborately worked out, and the board therefore begs to suggest that to this end there be enacted a provision of law similar to the one contained in the District appropriation act of August 6, 1890, which authorized the appointment by the President of a board of electrical, etc., experts, to consider the location, arrangement, and operation of electric wires in the District of Columbia; and the board also suggests that there be immediately appropriated the sum of $10,000 to meet the expenses of said board.

These experts show, in short, the great necessity as a matter of immediate economy that this great power should be thus utilized. We need it beyond a peradventure for the water necessities of the city of Washington, and I hope the Committee on Appropriations will permit the amendment to go into the bill, and if it is not in such shape as it should be to meet the end we desire it can be put in proper shape in conference.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if the amendment has been reported by any committee?

Mr. MANDERSON. It has not. I have made the statement that I hoped it would not be subjected to the point of order. It has not been recommended by any committee owing to the fact that this report of the electrical engineers only came to my hand to-day, but I think perhaps it may be considered in order because the Committee on the District of Columbia have made a similar report.

Mr. GORMAN. For the moment I reserve the point of order, but I trust the Senator from Nebraska will not press the amendment. It would be the entering upon a very large and a very expensive scheme for lighting this city and furnishing electric power for other purposes. It would involve the expenditure of a great deal of money. It would necessitate a great lawsuit between the Government and the State of Maryland. Away back in 1784 or 1785 Gen. Washington obtained for his navigation company from the State of Maryland the exclusive right from here to Cumberland and thence to the Ohio River. The State of Maryland owns the Potomac River from low-water mark on the Virginia side, and he obtained from the Government of the United States and from the State of Virginia the exclusive right to the use of all the water in the Potomac River, except sufficient for the purposes of the few manufacturing establishments that had water rights prior to that grant.

That grant was transferred to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal

Company, which canal was constructed by the State of Maryland, the Government of the United States, and the cities of Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown, the controlling interest being in the State of Maryland. At the Great Falls, on the Virginia side, there was a right which had been acquired by the company that now holds it, to use the water that flowed over the dam of the canal company on the Virginia side alone. When the Government of the United States began the construction of the water works for this city so perfectly clear was the right of the State and of the navigation company that Congress not having up to that time assumed authority to go into a State and condemn lands and other property, made an appeal to the State of Maryland and to the canal company, and the State of Maryland granted the right to the Government to put its dam across the river on such conditions as the navigation company would impose.

The conditions were that the dam was to be only so many feet in height, for otherwise it would destroy all the old work, and that the Government should take from it as much water as it wanted for the use of this city. That grant the Government formally accepted. When ten years ago it became necessary to increase the water supply here, which occurred since I have been a member of this body, the Congress of the United States made an appropriation to raise the dam so as to give a greater head of water; but it was only done upon condition that the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and the engineer of the State of Maryland should determine how high the dam should be raised, and the Government paid whatever amount was necessary for the purpose of raising the embankment.

Therefore, with all these complications outside of the main question of the Government entering upon this work of using this power for electric purposes rather than that private parties should do so, I say to the Senator from Nebraska that a measure of this sort ought not to be proposed until it is carefully guarded and the rights of the State of Maryland and of the company, as well as of the private company which owns on the Virginia shore, are looked into and gone over. I spent nearly three weeks as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, when I was a member of that committee in adjusting this matter.

Gen. Butler, representing the company which own water rights on the other side, came here with a great claim against the Government on account of the construction of the present dam, and it was a long time before that matter was adjusted. This proposition would reopen the whole matter. An appropriation bill, I submit, is not the proper place for it. It would require a great deal of time and very thorough discussion before such a proposition could be passed through this body. Therefore I am compelled to make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw the point of order for the present.

Mr. GORMAN. As a matter of course, if the Senater from Nebraska desires to be heard, I withdraw it. I reserve the point of order, however.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, wishes to make a few remarks, and he may modify the amendment so that it will be acceptable.

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the point of order for the present to enable the Senator from Vermont to be heard.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia had before them a measure involving the question of increased water supply for the city. In investigating that question we found that there were already very heavy claims for the use of water in the past to an amount larger than had been paid for. We found that the title to the land and the water rights at Great Falls were much involved, being partly owned by the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company having some claim, and that the Government had probably raised its dam and taken more water than it had paid for, and there would be a large claim for damages. We satisfied ourselves on one point, and there is no dispute about it, that an increased water supply is immediately neccessary for the health and comfort of the city. The supply now at the higher levels is very inadequate. I will read a sentence or two from the report of the Committee on the District of Columbia:

> All the area of more than 100 feet elevation above low water at the navy-yard is now supplied by pumping, and for want of sufficient pressure all above 75 feet will probably soon require it. The line of 100 feet elevation runs in the vicinity of Florida avenue, and of 75 feet in the vicinity of Massachusetts avenue west of Eleventh street. The time can not be far distant when a large majority of the residences will be elevated above this line. The vicinity of Tennallytown has an elevation of more than 400 feet above low tide.

It seemed to us that it was economy and wisdom and to the best interest of the city that this power should be acquired entirely by the Government. Divided ownership will always be a source of embarrassment, trouble, and cost. It can be acquired now, we believe, very much cheaper than in the future. Two companies were chartered, one by Maryland and the other by Virginia, at the last sessions of their Legislatures, with a view to go on and improve this water power for private purposes. Of course, if they make their improvements it will add greatly to the cost to the Government. Bills have been and are now before Congress looking to the chartering of companies for bringing electric power here from the Great Falls. So upon a very careful consideration of the whole matter and a report from the engineers, a very full and exhaustive one, we believe it to be a matter of economy for the Government to acquire the full interest, and it seems to me a matter of fairness to all interests and of prudence for the Government that we should at this time make some declaration of our purposes, if nothing further.

The idea of asking for an appropriation in the bill was not mine, but I feel bound, as it has come up, to say that I think we ought to take some action that will show the purpose of Congress in the matter and be notice to the owners of that purpose. If the point of order is insisted upon against the appropriation, I suggest that the amendment might be modified and a reference might be made of the matter to the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, who under existing law have the authority to appraise the damages for an additional supply of water and that they might report upon the amount of water and the needs of the District, and in that way at least it might tend to prevent a great increase of the cost to us.

I made an examination of this situation while in the War Department. Under the provisions of the old law I visited the falls with the Attorney-General and Gen. Butler and I have gone very carefully over the reports of the engineers. I do not believe that at the ordinary low stage—I will not say the extreme low stage—there is any great surplus of water and power, more than will be needed to make an ample supply for the city for aqueduct purposes, and not the power to generate electric light for public buildings and grounds and street lighting, aside from the question of lighting private houses, as we only propose to take it for public purposes.

I know that the parties in interest, the owners of the power, think that there is a greater quantity, but I can not agree with them, guided by my own observation and by the reports of the engineers. They report at a low stage of water some six thousand and odd horse power, and with an ordinary stage something over eight thousand. It certainly would not be any more than enough to generate electricity for lighting the town and furnish the water for aqueduct purposes. I think myself that it would be well to have some measure incorporated which would look to a careful survey and preparation of plans and indicate somewhat the purpose of Congress in the matter.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont, in connection with the question of water supply, whether the committee has any purpose in view concerning the partially completed reservoir near the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. PROCTOR. The committee has not investigated that matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. In reference to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I take occasion to say that I have had a pretty thorough knowledge of the subject. The United States has the right to take water from the Great Falls for city uses. The right to take water for manufacturing purposes—all the remaining right—belongs to the Great Falls Manufacturing Company.

The amount of water required under ordinary conditions for the domestic supply of the city of Washington is not more than one-fortieth part of the volume of water that flows in the river. Of course the United States can take the whole of this water power if it shall see fit to take it. It would be advisable to take it if it was needed for the purposes of the city, but not otherwise.

But to bring this question in here now, and undertake to assert the purpose of Congress in this particular simply because the Committee on the District of Columbia have reached a conclusion and framed a bill which is upon the Calendar of the Senate, seems to me to be unwise. I am entirely certain, from my knowledge of the subject, that neither one hundred nor two hundred nor three hundred nor five hundred thousand dollars would be adequate to totally extinguish the title of the Great Falls Manufacturing Company, even if the United States should determine to extinguish that title.

Mr. MANDERSON. May I ask the Senator what length of time this right of the Great Falls Company has existed?

Mr. CHANDLER. It has existed for fifty years.

Mr. MANDERSON. Have they ever utilized it for a single manufacturing establishment?

Mr. CHANDLER. They have not, for the reason stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. There has been a controversy going on for fifty years about this question, and the United States never has determined how much of the water was wanted for city uses. Until that question is determined it will not be safe for any manufacturing company to undertake to use the water of the Great Falls for manufacturing purposes. So the subject is in controversy. It was before the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] when he was Secretary of War. He did not succeed in adjusting it.

I say to the Senator from Nebraska that I entirely agree with him that the question should be settled, and if the United States needs this water it should take the water, but to come in here on a proposition to take it, and name the sum of $100,000, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," as indicating that by any possibility the value of these private rights is $100,000 or less, is, it seems to me, a very unfair method of treating the Great Falls Company, who have had no adequate hearing before the Committee on the District of Columbia, and who value their rights there at a great many times more than $100,000, which is the value the Senator from Nebraska undertakes to put upon them.

Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that at the proper time and in the proper way the United States should say that it wants all these water rights, that it will not have the waters of the Potomac at the Great Fall used for manufacturing purposes, but it does seem to me that it is very unjust to the parties who hold these private rights to come in here with a suggestion which the Senator from Vermont says he wants to have go to the world that these rights are worth only $100,000. The Senator from Nebraska has no idea whether they are worth one hundred thousand or half a million dollars, and yet he seems to stand here as a Senator of the United States putting that value upon this property. It appears to me that we have enough to do for the remainder of the session without undertaking in this way to depreciate the property of this company which stands at the door of Congress asking for justice.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I am charged by the Senator from New Hampshire with a very large degree of ignorance upon the subject, and I plead guilty of the charge. I do not know whether the property or the claimed ownership of the Great Falls Company is valuable or valueless. I have not attempted to sit as a board of appraisers upon the value of their property. My purpose is exactly what the amendment proposes. One hundred thousand dollars might or might not purchase the property. If it can not be negotiated for it is to be condemned and a legal board of appraisers will appraise it. They may appraise it at $5,000; they may appraise it at $500,000. If they should appraise it at $500,000, the $100,000 I have proposed to appropriate would not, of course, pay for it.

I am not attempting to fix the value of the property. I know nothing about it. I never heard of the existence of this corporation until this report came here. But about one thing there can be no question, and it seems to me the Senator from New Hampshire admits it, that this company——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I do admit it; but when the Senator says he has not undertaken to put a value upon their property by his amendment, I say he does that thing. He proposes to send out to the world as far as we can do it that all these rights are worth $100,000.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do nothing of the kind. I propose to fix the amount to be appropriated in this bill or what may be necessary. "So much thereof as may be necessary" is perhaps the language of the amendment. If it is, I stand by it. But that does not fix the value of the property. That is to be fixed by the board of appraisers who will condemn it and not by any statement that I may place in the amendment. I am not attempting to fix any limit upon the value of the property; I am simply trying to take that first step which shall lead to what is undoubtedly a necessity, that we should control, entirely control and own this great power and this great flow of water that is absolutely needed for the health and the very existence of this capital city.

Mr. President, here is a corporation that by admission has been half a century in claimed ownership of this water power. We are told that there is contention between the corporation and some other claimed owner. If this is of value why in the world have they not settled their contention long ago in the courts. The courts have been open to them, and they should have settled it long ago. But because there is a disputed ownership we should not hesitate to take the first step toward acquiring what the absolute necessities of this city require. All of that water power is required for the water supply of this city. It demands the power itself for the proper lighting of this city; and I say a proper regard for public interests demands of us that we should take a step in this direction.

I care nothing about the wording of the amendment. I simply desire that it shall go in the bill, and that the conference may take whatever steps they please. If they will only go to the extent of requiring that an exploration shall be made as to this title and as to what it will cost, that exploration to be made by the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General, I shall be content, but we will at least have taken a move in the right direction, and that is all I desire to accomplish by the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I renew the point of order I made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me to move an adjournment?

Mr. QUAY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 1, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 31, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSON, D. D.

THE JOURNAL AND THE RECORD.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. LOUD. I should like to have the Clerk read the summing up of the vote on the first roll call taken yesterday. I did not catch it as read. There seems to be a discrepancy in the RECORD on that point, and I should like to see how the Journal stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

The question being put, Will the House agree to said resolution? it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 54, answering present 7, reported present by tellers 4, not answering 169.

Mr. LOUD. I have no suggestion to make in regard to the Journal.

The Journal was then approved.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to suggest a correction of the RECORD. On page 8008 the same summing up of the vote is given as in the Journal. On page 8009, where the Speaker pro tempore announced the vote, it will be found that his announcement did not correspond with the summing up as given on the previous page. The announcement of the Chair as given in the RECORD might raise a question as to whether a quorum was present in the House. By referring to the second column, page 8009, it will be found the Speaker pro tempore said:

On this question the yeas are 116, the nays 52, answered present 6, reported as present by the tellers 4—

Making 178.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not apprehend exactly the gentleman's point.

Mr. LOUD. One of these statements in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, is probably correct; the other must be wrong, because they do not correspond. One gives the total number of members voting and present as 182; by the other it will appear there were only 178.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. LOUD. There was evidently some confusion in this case, because at the end of the roll call (I was one of the tellers) the Clerk announced to me that 165 had voted, and then turned to us and asked, "How many have you?" We said "seven;" but on further investigation that seven was reduced to four. It appears, however, that when the final computation was made there were 182.

Mr. EVERETT. I think I can state with reference to this matter——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand at all the point of the gentleman from California. The Journal shows a quorum. What is the point the gentleman makes?

Mr. LOUD. I think, Mr. Speaker, that these two statements should be made to correspond. The tally given immediately preceding the names of those voting shows 182 present; the announcement made by the Chair shows only 178. One statement will be found on page 8008 just before the roll call as published; the other will be found in the announcement of the Chair, second column, page 8009. I think these two statements ought to correspond.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD ought to correspond with the Journal undoubtedly in a matter of this kind.

Mr. LOUD. Perhaps the Speaker does not understand the point I wish to make. If he will turn to page 8008, just before the names as printed, and will take the summary there given of those voting and those present and not voting, he will find that it foots 182. In one case the yeas are given as 117, the nays 54; in the other case the yeas are given as 116, the nays 52. The latter statement will be found, as I have already remarked, in the second column on page 8009, where the Speaker pro tempore made the announcement of the vote.

The SPEAKER. The announcement made by the Chair does not seem to be accurate.

Mr. LOUD. The two statements ought to correspond.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make any motion with relation to the RECORD. The Chair does not see that it is in the power of the House to change any statement made by the Chair.

Mr. LOUD. I desire to call the attention of the Speaker and the House to the two different statements contained in the RECORD, one of which must be incorrect. The first one is in accordance with the Journal and is probably correct. The second statement, I submit, ought to have been made to correspond with that.

The SPEAKER. Of course, in any question between the Journal and the RECORD, the Journal must control.

INVESTIGATION OF CITY SLUMS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the seventh special report of the Commissioner of Labor. This report relates to what is generally known as the slums of cities, and has been prepared in accordance with the joint resolution approved July 20, 1892.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 27, 1894.

HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress:

I herewith transmit a communication from the Secretary of State, covering two dispatches from the United States minister at Honolulu.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 30, 1894.

PAY, BOUNTY, AND PRIZE MONEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution of June 27, information relative to the money now in the Treasury of the United States arising from arrears of pay, bounty, and prize money due the estates of certain deceased colored soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 100) referring to the Treasury Department the claims of sundry persons for examination, adjustment, and report to Congress—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 471) to relieve John Friedlin from the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 653) to open certain parts of the Fort Jupiter military reservation in the State of Florida to entry under the homestead laws—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

A bill (S. 1454) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the reproductions of caravels of Columbus to the Columbian Museum of Chicago—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1535) to correct the naval history of John C. Dull—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 1841) to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, offices, or manufactories shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the bill of the Senate, No. 2118, authorizing the sale of the title of the United States to certain property in Montgomery County, Md., to William H. and George Bobinger, was referred to the District Committee on yesterday. The purpose of this bill is to direct the Secretary of War to convey a piece of property that lies in the State of Maryland—a question which is entirely outside of the jurisdiction of our committee. I move, therefore, its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the District of Columbia will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill in question, and the same will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to Mr. AITKEN to print in the RECORD certain remarks on the tariff bill.

JAMES FAY.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7683) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay.

The SPEAKER. This bill was called up by the gentleman from New York on yesterday and a request made for unanimous consent for its consideration, to which objection was made. The Chair is informed that the objection has now been withdrawn and the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCNAGNY. I renew the objection.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman allow an explanation?

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1686) granting a pension to Margaret English;

A bill (H. R. 5020) granting a pension to Washington Hislop;

A bill (H. R. 5351) granting a pension to Celestia P. Hartt;

A bill (H. R. 6309) for the relief of the dependent relatives of the seamen of the Netherlands steamer Amsterdam, who lost their lives in the effort to save the crew of the American schooner Maggie E. Wells, and also for the sole survivor of the rescuing party;

A bill (H. R. 6893) to regulate water main assessments in the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 6969) for the relief of Benjamin F. Poteet;

A bill (S. 1468) for the relief of James L. Townsend;

A bill (H. R. 1377) for the relief of William Hendershott, of Butteville, Oregon; and

A bill (S. 2150) to provide an American register for the steamer Oceano, of New York, N. Y.

HEIRS OF D. FULFORD.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 143) for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there is objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. Before consent is given I would like to have the report in that case read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. COX) was read at length.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman can furnish some statement that the bonds were actually the property of the intestate, and some information from the Treasury Department, I will be compelled to object. The report sets forth none of the facts upon which the bill is based.

Mr. LUCAS. I have the report that was submitted to the Senate, containing a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury covering the case.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that can be read.

The letter was read, as follows:,

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1892.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 6th instant inclosing copy of Senate bill No. 1565, for the relief of the heirs of D. Fulford, a claim for payment of one $500, one $100, and two $50 United States coupon bonds of the loan known as consols of 1867, and asking that your committee be informed whether or not bonds of this loan remain unpaid, and if the coupons of such bonds dated July 1, 1872, have been paid without the subsequent presentation of other coupons; also if a satisfactory bond of indemnity could be given to protect the United States against another claim, so that the claim could be paid.

In reply I have to inform you that upon an examination of the records of the Department it is found that there are outstanding unpaid coupon bonds of the loan known as consols of 1867 as follows: Eighty-five bonds of the denomination of $50, 167 bonds of $100, and 107 bonds of $500. There are no $50 bonds outstanding of which the last coupon bears date July 1, 1872. It is evident, therefore, that the two $50 bonds alleged to have been burned do not belong to the loan of consols of 1867. Of the denomination of $100 and $500 there are outstanding 2 of each denomination, of which the last coupon paid is dated July 1, 1873. This Department could not undertake to say which of these bonds, if any, are the ones alleged to have been destroyed.

It is apparent from the foregoing that identification of the bonds which Mr. Fulford lost seems impossible. The description of the fire as given in a letter from Mr. Fulford on file in this Department does not show that it was accidental. The house was unoccupied that day for two or more hours just before the fire, and while it is probable that no crime was committed, it is not impossible that the house was robbed in the absence of its occupants and burned to cover that crime.

In view of all the circumstances, I am unable to say that a satisfactory bond of indemnity could be given to protect the United States against another claim.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES FOSTER, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the communication that has just been read from the Secretary of the Treasury, I will have to ask the gentleman to withhold the bill until I can examine into it.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit me to explain the matter from the committee that reported the bill, I think there will be no trouble about it.

Mr. SAYERS. I will have to object until it has been referred to the Secretary.

Mr. PICKLER. We would like to hear from the gentleman from Tennessee on the subject.

Mr. COX. I reported the bill and know exactly the facts on which it is based. I have no objection to making a brief statement. The report read by the Clerk is one that was made by the Senate some time back.

Mr. LUCAS. Two years ago.

Mr. COX. Several years ago. The committee acted, however, on the statement from the Treasury Department, and there were only two bonds of this class outstanding, and there was no trouble about the question except that we did not have the numbers of the bonds.

But it is evident beyond doubt that the $500 bond which was burned was one of the two. On investigation it is found that there are but two bonds of $500 of that series outstanding, and when we investigated the facts to find how the bonds were destroyed we found the following conditions of affairs: The owner of the bonds was a minister and the facts disclose that he had the bonds.

There is no doubt about the ownership of them. He had them in his little secretary, and he was called away with his wife to visit a sick member of his church. They went to see him, and the minister's wife returned, leaving him with the sick man. She says that she built a fire in the stove to prepare something to eat, and then walked out to the field where her son was at work, and while she was gone the house caught fire. Now, the banker who had control of the bonds says he turned them over to the minister just a few days before. When they discovered that the house was on fire they went back, but were unable to save the bonds. The evidence further shows that the minister had a memorandum of the numbers of the bonds, but the memorandum was burned with the bonds. There are but two outstanding bonds of that series, of $500 each.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but how long was this man who owned the bonds absent before the fire broke out?

Mr. COX. Only a short time. The evidence shows that he went out to see a sick member of his church and his wife went with him.

Mr. KILGORE. About how long was he gone?

Mr. COX. Probably an hour or two.

Mr. KILGORE. There are some $50 bonds mentioned. Is it not a fact that they have been presented and paid? Does not the Secretary of the Treasury say that?

Mr. COX. No, the $50 bonds referred to in that report of the Senate are evidently described under the wrong act. There was one $500 bond and there were four $50 bonds, making $700 in all.

The only trouble about the $50 bonds is that they put them under the wrong act of Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. I suggest to the gentleman to withdraw his bill for the present.

Mr. LUCAS. I withdraw the bill, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas.

EFFECTS OF MACHINERY ON LABOR.

Mr. McGANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 95) providing for an investigation relating to the effects of machinery on labor.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and report upon the effect of the use of machinery upon labor and the cost of production, the relative productive power of hand and machine labor, the cost of manual and machine power as they are used in productive industries, the effect upon wages of the use of machinery operated by women and children, and whether changes in the creative cost of products are due to a lack or to a surplus of labor or to the introduction of power machinery. To enable the Commissioner of Labor to carry out the provisions of this resolution the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, but should not this sum be sufficient to complete the investigation called for herein the Commissioner of Labor is hereby authorized to complete it under the regular appropriations for the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

JAMES FAY.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, the objection which was made to the consideration of the bill which I offered has been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York states that the objection to the bill which he wished to have considered is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the title of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 663) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOMBS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In lines 4 and 5, strike out the words "remove the charge of desertion now standing against," and insert the word "correct."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOMBS, the title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to correct the record of James Fay."

On motion of Mr. COOMBS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAYERS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the rule which was reported from the Committee on Rules and under consideration when the House adjourned last evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the report from the Committee on Rules which was before the House last evening, and to reconsider any necessary votes to accomplish that purpose. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

CHOCTAW COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7680) to authorize purchasers of the property and franchises of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to organize a corporation and to confer upon the same all the powers, privileges, and franchises vested in that company; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The other committees were called.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6777) to amend the charter of the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. FAULKNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6720) providing for the resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 463) to reimburse the State of Nebraska the expenses incurred by that State in repelling a threatened invasion and raid by the Sioux in 1890 and 1891, asked a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. PALMER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. HATCH. I have sent up the report. Let the Clerk read first the report and then the statement accompanying it.

[For report of committee of conference see proceedings of the Senate of July 30.]

The statement was read, as follows:

Statement to accompany the report of conferees on H. R. 6937, "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895."

The undersigned conferees on the part of the House, having met the conferees on the part of the Senate, in full and free conference upon the disagreeing votes between the two Houses upon H. R. 6937, "An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," beg to make the following statement:

Among the amendments that the conferees on the part of the House recede from in this report numbers 1, 4, 6, 8, 10, 14, 15, 17, 18, 23, 25, 27, 29, 30, 34, 36, 40, 45, 48, 58, 60, 66, 70, 79, 81, and 90 are mere verbal amendments, including those necessary to perfect totals made by more important amendments.

The first important change made by Senate amendment is found upon page 2, wherein the gross sum allowed by the House bill for the employment of firemen, watchmen, clerks, messengers, laborers, mechanics, and wharfwomen was $49,520; classifying the service, as formerly done, and leaving the gross sum $26,000. The aggregate appropriation under this paragraph is reduced by the Senate amendment $5,840, and the House conferees receded from the disagreement upon the part of the House. All amendments from Nos. 2 to 15, inclusive, refer to this change, restoring the clerical force as provided under the present law, and correcting totals.

Amendment No. 19 was receded from on the part of the House conferees, leaving the salary of the statistician $3,000 instead of $3,500 as provided in the House bill, with the concession on the part of the Senate conferees of adding $200 to the salary of the assistant statistician, who in the absence of the statistician is charged with the responsibility of preparing the monthly crop reports and other important work of the division.

Amendment No. 41 provided for a restoration of the division of illustrations. The Secretary of Agriculture had strongly recommended that this work be allowed to be done, when needed, by contract, rather than to maintain a division, which a considerable portion of the time would be unemployed. The conferees on the part of the Senate receded from this amendment, and also from Nos. 62, 63, and 64, which restored the appropriations for illustrations and engravings as recommended by the Secretary and as provided by the House bill.

Amendment 78 provided for rearranging the buildings of the Department, but the conferees on the part of the two Houses agreed that in lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment the words "and improving" be inserted, and after the word "building," in line 21, page 24, the words "not including the erection of new buildings" be inserted. The conferees on the part of the House also receded from amendment No. 86, with an amendment inserting in lieu of the words stricken out, the words "or additional apartments not including the erection of new buildings."

The conferees on the part of the Senate receded from the amendments No. 33, restoring the salary of the pathologist to $2,500; No. 35, restoring the salary of the chief of the division of forestry to $2,500; No. 37, restoring the salary of the assistant chief of division of records and editing to $1,800; No. 42, providing a superintendent of seed room; Nos. 46 and 47, rearranging the document and folding room, leaving the section as recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture and as provided by the House bill; No. 49, a verbal change to conform to rulings made as to payments by the Treasury Department, and No 53 was a like change.

Amendments Nos. 66 to 71, inclusive, relate to the purchase and distribution of seeds, practically restoring the former mode of distributing seeds from the Department, and were agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House.

No agreement could be reached by the conferees on amendment No. 65, providing an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the destruction of Russian cactus.

The bill as it passed the House carried an appropriation of $3,215,643.06; as it passed the Senate it carried $4,225,183.06. Reductions amounting to $19,160 were made in conference, and increases were made which amounted to $13,000, leaving a net reduction of $6,160. The bill as agreed upon, exclusive of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the extermination of Russian cactus, carries an appropriation of $3,212,863.06.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

W. H. HATCH,
W. S. FORMAN,
DAN WAUGH,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, the statement is a full and complete explanation of the report. The report is a full and complete agreement as to every Senate amendment except that one indicated in the last paragraph of the report. It is known as the million-dollar appropriation for the extermination in the Northwestern States of what is known as the Russian cactus or Russian thistle.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as that is the only amendment in dispute between the two Houses, I move the adoption of the report; and upon that I demand the previous question. I will then ask the House to insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate appropriating that million dollars, and on that will arrange such reasonable time for debate as gentlemen on the other side will agree upon.

Mr. PICKLER. I simply desire to ask the gentleman a question: Whether the amount is retained in the bill for the distribution of seed as passed by the House?

Mr. HATCH. It is the same exactly. There is no change made. There is $160,000 appropriated, $30,000 of it being for the monthly bulletins, or farmers' bulletins and publications. The rest is exactly as it left the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. I notice in this report that there is reference to several restorations of salaries and of divisions. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this appropriation bill what would be the difference, if any, from the old condition, say of two years ago, in regard to this bill, so far as salaries are concerned. Will they not be substantially the same?

Mr. HATCH. They will be substantially the same. There was, as I remember now, three chiefs of divisions who were receiving $2,000, while all the other chiefs of divisions received $2,500. The House committee agreed, on the suggestion and strong recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, that all these chiefs of divisions should receive the same salaries; and he advised and strongly recommended that the chief of division of forestry and vegetable pathology should be increased to $2,500. That was done by the House, and the Senate struck them out; but the Senate receded from its amendment. There was also an increase in the salary of the statistician of $1,000. The Senate reduced that $500, and the House accepted the amendment, and receded from its position.

Mr. HEPBURN. The Chairman will remember about a year ago there were reports, emanating from the Secretary of Agriculture, of many curtailments in his office and reductions of expenditures. Whole divisions, if I recollect correctly, were disposed of and the employés dismissed by him. Now, is it not true that in this bill all these divisions are restored and provision made for all those persons, or at least an equal number of persons, to those who were dismissed under this plea of economy of a year ago?

Mr. HATCH. So far as the divisions stand, they are practically the same as in the present law. The Secretary has dismissed and discharged quite a number of employés in the different divisions that he regarded as unnecessary; and of course where that has been done no provision has been made for the salaries.

Mr. HEPBURN. For instance, in this bill there is provision for a distribution of seed. Was not there a large number of persons dismissed from that division, from the uselessness, in the opinion of the Secretary, of that provision; and are they not, under this provision of the bill to be restored?

Mr. HATCH. The only officer of the seed division that is drawing a salary under that provision of the appropriation bill and that is omitted from this is what is known as the superintendent of the seed room.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am asking not in regard to salaries, but in regard to expenditures.

Mr. HATCH. There is one left out of this bill which was in the other bill, simply because the Secretary recommended the change and said that two salaried officers in that connection were unnecessary; but substantially it is the same, and the amount is increased as it was by the House from $130,000 to $160,000, the extra $30,000 to be devoted to the preparation, publication, and distribution of farmers' bulletins.

The conference report was adopted.

On motion of Mr. HATCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted was laid on the table.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 65, known as the Russian thistle amendment, and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For the destruction of the Russian cactus (technically salsoli kali tragus), $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be apportioned by the Secretary of Agriculture among the several States infested by Russian cactus, said apportionment to be made in accordance with the necessities of the case, to be ascertained by the Secretary, and to be paid to the governor of each of said States upon his executing an obligation on behalf of his State that the sum so paid shall be faithfully applied in connection with any sum which may be raised for that purpose in his State for the destruction of said cactus.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House insist on its disagreement to this amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move that the House agree to the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. GEAR. Then I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate just read.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to come to some understanding with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], who has made that motion, as to what length of general debate he desires, if any?

Mr. GEAR. I simply desire to state, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. I do not yield the floor yet.

Mr. GEAR. I will not ask for any debate if the gentleman will let me make a brief statement. I simply desire to say that this amendment is of a good deal of importance to the people in my part of the country.

It is a well-established fact, generally admitted by all who understand the subject, that this Russian thistle is the great evil which is troubling the agricultural communities of the Northwest, in the Dakotas, and Northern Iowa. The people of Iowa would like to see the Government take some steps towards extirpating it, and they believe that it is not only the right, but the duty, of the Government to take steps to extirpate this weed which threatens to overwhelm a large portion of the agricultural States of the Union. I therefore hope that the Senate amendment will be agreed to by the House.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I shall make only a brief statement and then will ask to have read from the Clerk's desk the report submitted by the Committee on Agriculture upon certain bills in relation to this subject. Two bills were introduced into the House, one by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and the other by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BOEN] and referred by the Speaker, under the rules, to the Committee on Agriculture. The question was a new one and the committee gave it the most courteous and exhaustive consideration. The gentlemen who had introduced these bills, Senator HANSBROUGH of North Dakota, the governor of North Dakota, and other gentlemen, were heard patiently and as fully as they desired, and after the most complete and exhaustive consideration of the subject the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. BAKER] was instructed by the committee to report those bills to the House with the recommendation that they lie on the table, that being the unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture.

I had supposed that when this amendment was put upon the bill in the Senate it was done either by inadvertence or as a matter of humor. I did not think the idea would be seriously entertained by any considerable number, either in this or in the other branch of Congress, and it is to me almost incredible that the Senate of the United States by a direct vote should have put this rider on the agricultural bill. I now ask the House to listen to the report of the Committee on Agriculture upon the bills in relation to this subject that were introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota and the gentleman from Minnesota.

The report (by Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bills H. R. 4925, H. R. 5507, and H. R. 5745, each intending to provide for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus (technically Salsoli kali tragus), has had each of them under consideration, and begs leave to report the said several bills with the recommendation that they do not pass.

Your committee has given these bills most careful and considerate attention, and has granted hearings, extending over several days, to all persons asking to be heard.

Among those appearing before your committee in advocacy of the proposed legislation were: Governor Shortridge, of North Dakota; Senator HANSBROUGH and Representative JOHNSON of the same State, and Representative BOEN of Minnesota. Your committee sought information concerning the nature, growth, and general characteristics of this alleged noxious weed from many other persons believed to be well qualified to give unbiased information on these points.

The advocates of Congressional legislation, as proposed in these bills, not only asserted that the weed is the worst known to agriculturists, but that national aid and authority are necessary to secure its extermination. They presented statistics and evidence to show that it is rapid in growth; that each plant, through the almost unlimited quantity of seeds it matures and by the facility with which its ripened branches breaking from the main stem are driven by the wind, scattering its seeds over large areas of territory, is capable of reproducing itself with remarkable celerity, each new plant in its turn becoming a fresh source of seed supply. In this way it is claimed the thistle advances its frontiers of growth several miles each year, and it is generally believed that it is the most troublesome of all the weeds which infest the Western farms.

On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Russian thistle is an annual plant; that it dies each year and is propagated by seed only. It is evident, therefore, that if it is destroyed before its seeds ripen it can not reproduce itself.

Its extermination is certain if each farmer on his own lands will give sufficient care and attention to the destruction of these weeds before they mature, and if the State and local authorities will combine to destroy it in the same way on highways and lands not in private ownership. Several of the States have statutes providing for the destruction of the Canadian thistle and other weeds, and if those statutes are amended so as to include the Russian thistle, and if like statutes are enacted in other States, it is presumed no further legislation will be necessary.

The service required will not be exceedingly burdensome, but prompt and efficient work, and, possibly, a repetition of the means adopted to destroy the thistle will be necessary to fully eradicate it. It may be done either by turning it under with the plow or by mowing it as often as is needed to prevent its seeds from ripening.

The labor and expense necessary to rid farms of this thistle is much less than that required to clear land in many localities or to prepare rocky farms for successful cultivation in others or to exterminate the Canadian thistle where it has become firmly established.

Your committee are of the opinion that State and local authorities are fully able to eradicate this weed without national aid.

In this view they are sustained by the farmers' convention of Brown County, S. Dak. At a meeting held in March last at Aberdeen, in the locality where the weed is most troublesome, they expressed themselves as follows:

"Resolved, That the reports made in the East of the damage caused by the so-called Russian thistle in this region have been greatly exaggerated, to the detriment of our State, and that we, farmers of Brown County, in institute assembled, know that by thorough cultivation we will be able to successfully deal with this annual weed."

This is the voluntary statement, after due deliberation, of farmers who have had practical experience with the Russian thistle, and their opinion is sustained by many of the most capable botanists of our country, some of whom are connected with agricultural colleges and State experiment stations.

There are those who claim that the thistle is not the pest which others represent it. Some farmers assert that it affords good pasturage for cattle and when cut at the proper time makes good hay. Your committee does not attempt to reconcile the conflicting statements of those favoring and those opposing a national appropriation. Time and experience will determine how far any profitable use can be made of the weed, and how best it can be removed if it is decided to exterminate it.

Whether or not Congress can constitutionally appropriate public moneys as proposed by these bills, your committee has not thought it necessary to inquire. They are fully of the opinion that the Government has no proper authority to justify an invasion of private property for the purpose of destroying these weeds.

Those farmers who believe them to be a possible benefit would not coöperate with national agents seeking to destroy them and might oppose such action, and they and others probably would claim damages for the destruction of their wheat or other crops destroyed in the effort to exterminate the thistle.

This probability seems in itself to be a sufficient reason why Congress should not legislate as suggested, but when it is combined with the uncertainty arising from the conflicting statements in regard to the nature of the plant itself and the great doubt of the actual necessity for national aid in the premises the reasons against national interference become conclusive.

Hence your committee is of the opinion that it is inexpedient to legislate as proposed by the said bills and recommend that they lie on the table.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, as that report was prepared by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr BAKER], I will now yield him five minutes if he desires to supplement it with any remarks.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, at the present session of Congress the three bills that are referred to in the report just read were referred to the Committee on Agriculture. That committee gave hearings to all who wished to be heard in regard to them. Those hearings extended over several days. The whole subject was most thoroughly discussed before the committee publicly, and subsequently by the committee, and as a result of that discussion the committee unanimously decided to report the bills adversely. They had before them not only the arguments in favor of the proposed legislation, but also an extended correspondence with botanists throughout the country, especially with those at the agricultural stations, and I think I am correct in saying that without exception there was not one of those botanists at the agricultural colleges or experimental stations who did not believe that the Russian thistle or cactus could be exterminated without national aid and that it was inadvisable to grant such aid.

This alleged pest is a peculiar plant. It possesses very many elements which are threatening to the agriculturist; but on the other hand it is such a plant that it can very easily be exterminated. The principal point on that subject is this: This plant is an annual one; it dies with the year in which it grows, and never springs from the root. Consequently each year it must come from the seed, or there is no more thistle. This in itself, in my mind and in the minds of the committee, was sufficient to determine that the local farmers can exterminate the thistle without national aid.

These bills differed from the Senate amendment in this particular: The bills provided that the expenditure of the money should be by Government agents. The Senate amendment proposes that the expenditure of the money shall be by State agents, and that the only part which the National Government shall perform, except in finding the money, is to turn it over to the governors of the several States, to be used by them at their discretion. This element of the Senate amendment is to my mind a still further objection to the appropriation; and I think the House, in the interest of economy and the interest of the people at large, should insist upon its disagreement, and should adopt the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

But in this particular the amendment of the Senate is still further objectionable: If this money is granted by the National Government upon any basis whatever, it will become the means by which claims against the Government will be brought by those whose land is invaded for the purpose of destroying the thistle. Of course, the thistle can not be destroyed while crops are growing in the same field without a destruction of a portion of the growing crop. If that growing crop is destroyed by the authority of the National Government, the owner of the crop is entitled to compensation; and this would be the beginning of thousands of claims which would pester Congress and afflict the Government for a score of years at least.

Still, again, this thistle is not, according to the best evidence which the committee could obtain, so formidable as it is represented to be. The farmers of Aberdeen County, in South Dakota, have so expressed themselves in the resolution which is incorporated in the report I had the honor to make. This plant is not so hard to extirpate as the Canadian thistle, which the farmers of many of the States have contended with for one hundred years. It is not so hard to exterminate as it is to clear the forests in many sections of the Union in order to make good farming land. It is not so hard to exterminate as it is to clear the rocks from the farms in very many portions of the country—in my own State, for example, in connection with which I myself have rendered service.

Mr. BOEN. Does the gentleman regard rocks and trees as noxious to agriculture in the same sense that this weed is?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The gentleman's question, of course, answers itself, because the rocks and trees are not so rapid in their growth as the thistle. But the rocks and the trees do not die with the end of the year, as the thistle does. And right there comes the grand distinction which I thank my friend for presenting.

Mr. BOEN. Does the gentleman regard rocks and trees as enemies or pests threatening the interests of the farming community?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Rocks are always a damage to agricultural land; and free rock which rolls with the plow or the harrow is particularly damaging; and where a country is covered with heavy forests it is impossible to make that section an agricultural community until the trees shall have been removed; and so far as it is necessary to give labor for the removal of those trees, just so far are they an obstacle to agriculture. A like expenditure of time, money, and exertion would in two years rid the entire Northwest of this Russian thistle; and for such a matter as that it seems to be mere play to ask this House to appropriate a million dollars of the public funds to aid in the destruction of something which, according to the assertion of very many, is a blessing and not a curse.

Mr. HULICK. What was proposed by any of the persons who appeared before your committee as to the manner in which the money should be expended to exterminate this thistle? What practical plan did they suggest, if any?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The plan suggested was that of most of the bills. I think the plans did not vary in that respect. I will read from one of these bills for the gentleman's enlightenment:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to appoint two competent agents, one at an annual salary of $1,800, the other at an annual salary of $1,600, whose duty it shall be, under instructions from the Secretary of Agriculture, to make examinations and investigations at such points as may by him be deemed necessary and report to him with respect to the extent of the noxious plant or weed commonly known as Russian thistle or Russian cactus (in technical language, Salsola kali tragus) in any of the States or Territories of the Union, and upon receipt of conclusive information through said agents that such noxious plant or weed exists and is growing and thriving upon any of the lands in any State or Territory, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to make a comprehensive division of the total area reported by said agents to be infested with Russian thistle or Russian cactus into suitable and convenient districts, not exceeding forty in number, and to appoint one superintendent, at a salary of $3 per diem and necessary expenses, for each of the said forty districts.

Provision is also made for the employment of subagents; and the money appropriated by the bill is to be used by them for the purpose of eradicating this thistle, which eradication can be accomplished in two ways: One by plowing and thus turning the thistle under, so that no seed will ripen; the other by mowing it with the scythe and thus destroying its capacity to yield seed from which new plants can spring.

Mr. HULICK. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire another question. Was it contemplated that any of the appropriation to be made by this bill was to be used for any other purpose than for salaries to officers to execute the law, or was it contemplated that any of it was to be appropriated to the farmers themselves, to give them employment in the destruction of this weed?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. None was to be used in any other way than under the direction of the agents of the Government. Of course it would have been possible for them to have employed the farmers as assistants.

Mr. HATCH. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Before that I wish to ask the gentleman from New Hampshire a question with his consent. This is a new matter to me practically. Will the gentleman state where this thistle is to be found principally, and whether it is increasing or spreading in extent?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. It is mainly found in the two Dakotas, in Iowa and Nebraska, and it is supposed to be increasing as the seeds mature and scatter.

Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa. Then it is increasing?

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is the fact.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, I favor this appropriation for the reason that it is a well established fact, that with the incoming to this country of a new people from Russia called the Mennonites, these seed came also and have taken root throughout the Northwest and are spreading rapidly in Northern Iowa and Nebraska, and in the Dakotas. It seems to me eminently fit and proper, in view of the facts, that the Federal Government should take charge of the matter and inaugurate prompt steps, if possible, to eradicate what is recognized by all as a growing evil. I do not care whether it is done by the governors of the States or by the Agricultural Department, but some remedy should be applied by virtue of which this plant may be exterminated.

The gentleman from Missouri expresses great surprise at the Senate proposing this amendment. Why, bless the gentleman's soul, is he not surprised every hour in the day when the conferees of the House, meeting the conferees on the part of the Senate on the amendments of that body to the pending tariff bill, report themselves unable to come to any terms?

He doubts also the constitutionality of this act. Why, it is a well-known fact that it is within the Federal power to go into every farmyard in every county and commonwealth of every one of the States, and wherever they find the evil of pleuropneumonia take charge of the infected animals and destroy them in order to eradicate the disease. Does the gentleman not know that the Government provides for the payment, if I understand it aright, of the parties who have their cattle destroyed in this way? The power of the Government is ample and undisputed in regard to matters of this kind which may affect the general welfare.

To me it seems only reasonable that this money should be appropriated. It is true the Secretary of Agriculture has proposed a remedy. His remedy is that the sheep of North Dakota, which are fond of the plant, shall eat it all up. Why, bless the Secretary of Agriculture, does not he know that under the Democratic tariff policy, if carried out, there would be no sheep in North or South Dakota, in Nebraska or Ohio, or anywhere else? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTHWAY. We have two or three millions to sell in Ohio, cheap now.

Mr. GEAR. Yes; dog cheap. Sheep that a year or two ago would have brought $4 a head at ready sale, are slow now at 50 to 75 cents in my country, and I suppose it is so in the State represented by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is correct.

Mr. GEAR. I hope the motion to concur in the Senate amendment will be adopted. It seems to me that the evidence adduced before the Senate, and which can be and will be produced here in a few moments, affords ample ground for the concurrence in this amendment.

I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want only a few minutes.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Iowa has yielded the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I think I shall want from five to eight minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Very well, after the gentleman has exhausted the time allowed to him by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have not given this subject that careful consideration that has been given to it by the Committee on Agriculture. I can only take the reports that have been made to the Senate and the House, and the information given to us by the officials connected with the Department of Agriculture. When I take these I find—taking the report of the Senate—that this thistle in 1878 to 1880 made its first appearance; that it has already spread over 70,000 square miles in the wheat-growing region of the Northwest.

I find in North and South Dakota that two-thirds of those States are already covered, not only the private lands, but the public lands as well. I find that it has extended to Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nebraska, and Wyoming. I find that the Department of Agriculture reports year before last the loss to agriculture from this thistle was $2,000,000, and last year the loss was $5,000,000.

I find from the report of the botanist of the Agricultural Department—long in office, and, I presume, efficient, because the Secretary still retains his services—this extract, which I will read from his report, and I beg the attention of the House while I read it:

A study of this question for the past two years by the Department of Agriculture shows conclusively that the progress of this weed can be stopped only by uniform, concerted action during the same season or seasons over the whole infested area.

A half a dozen States, with, I believe, 70,000 square miles of territory, being the area now covered.

The facts at present in hand show also that the progress of the Russian thistle is rapid, and that if any determined action is to be taken against it, it may be taken far more economically in the immediate future than after the expiration of a few years.

Listen:

It is undoubtedly true that if the progress of the weed is not stopped, the damage caused by it in future years will annually reach $25,000,000.

There is the condition. Now, if that be true, as we are assured by this high authority, is it not time for action to be taken by the Federal Government? It seems to me it is. Gentlemen say there is no constitutional power. So they said as to the stamping out of pleuro-pneumonia; but those of us who were here at the inception of that appropriation will recollect that the position was taken that under the Federal Constitution, in the presence of a great evil that spread throughout the length and breadth of the country, and which could not be reached otherwise, the Federal Constitution was broad enough and strong enough to authorize appropriations to attain the object in view. We made those appropriations and they have been successful.

One further word. It is not sufficient that North or South Dakota, or Iowa, or one county or many, should take this action alone. Concert of action is what is needed, and if this official in the Agricultural Department tells the truth, it is our duty to commence, and to commence now, in this work, especially as over half of the lands in the Dakotas are good lands. One further remark and I have done. We now have 70,000,000 people in this country. Gentlemen have been in the habit of saying that these lands in the far West and the Northwest are not of much account. No longer have we public lands where the rains fall reliably, so as to make good crops. With a population ever increasing, to be increased many times before another century elapses, it is absolutely certain and sure that all this country referred to is to be utilized, and to be of the best agricultural lands on earth, by appropriating the water from all the rivers, including the Missouri, by way of irrigation; to be reënforced many times in amount by wisely storing the storm waters, so as to irrigate these lands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In my judgment, for the present and in the near future, as that country is sparsely settled and poor, and it is not practicable for them to coöperate, I submit whether it is not our duty to make this appropriation under apt provisions, which I am willing to intrust to the Committee on Agriculture under the leadership of its able chairman, and to commence this work.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BOEN].

Mr. BOEN. Mr. Speaker, when about six months ago I introduced a bill (H. R. 4925) providing for the destruction and extermination of the noxious plant or weed known as saltwort, or Russian thistle, or cactus, so little was known about this subject that it was considered an untimely move on my part, because very few people thought there were any of these thistles in our State. Now, Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk to have read a bulletin issued by the University of Minnesota on this subject.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. BOEN. Mr. Speaker, in order not to occupy the time of the House, I ask unanimous consent to have that bulletin printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the document which he has sent to the desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bulletin is as follows:

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE, OR RUSSIAN TUMBLEWEED.

[Willet M. Hays.]

The Russian thistle, or Russian tumbleweed (Salsola kali, var tragus), was brought from Russia, probably with flaxseed, where it is said to be a most serious pest. From a very small start in ten or more years, it had gotten a very strong hold in one or two counties in South Dakota; and in six years more it has rapidly spread by the aid of the wind so as to thoroughly infest and cover numerous South Dakota and several North Dakota counties, and the great body of the advance is nearly to the western border of our own State. By the aid of the railroads coming eastward this pest has much more rapidly advanced upon us than its natural mode of traveling before the wind would enable it to do. It infests our State at various points, and has even passed through our own State and is causing alarm by appearing at Madison, Wis., and at other points. It has shown its ability to travel, and to thrive in a variety of conditions by migrating southward through Iowa, Nebraska, and even into more remote States.

In Nebraska it has been found in nearly thirty counties. Our railroad lines are dotted or fringed with the weed at many points, and around our stockyards and many of our large terminal elevator centers it has gotten a firm and dangerous hold. It is now so situated that it can very rapidly distribute from these many centers and from the many others sure to become infested by the further importation into our State, and if left uncontrolled it will soon become a common and pernicious weed. The great body of this weed invasion will come upon us through our western border before the winds which drive unhindered across our nearly treeless and fenceless Western prairies. Likewise from the centers infested within the State will the winds roll these weeds into our fields, scatter seeds along our wagon roads, and into every nook where a weed can thrive, will this pest find a place to center as a nuisance.

When young this tumbleweed is an innocent appearing plant and will not compete strongly with grass and other plants for a place. In the early stage of its growth it is a soft, succulent kind of herbage not ungrateful to stock. But if given a roomy nook, as on a freshly made gopher mound, ample room in a field of breaking, or plenty of air and sun room along the wheel tracks in the highway, it grows as few other weeds ever grow.

It thrives in our richest soils and does nearly as well when drought and hot winds choke most other weeds into very modest achievements. This tumbleweed is like our common prairie tumbleweed (Amarantus alba) in some of its characters, looks like it, in fact, from a distance when mature, grows in newly broken land or along roadways, and is like it in its manner of tumbling before the wind. On closer examination, the plant is found to be very different from the common tumbleweed. When ripe its stems are much tougher and stiffer, enabling it to ride longer in the wind before being torn to pieces. At this stage of growth the slender, soft leaves born during its early stages, have partly fallen off, and at each joint on the stems are several leaf-like spines, both strong and sharp. These are so rigid that horses' legs are much injured by forcing them to pass through a growth of the nearly mature weeds. In an illustration made by Dr. Otto Lugger, drawings of parts of a stem, of flowers, etc., show the botanical features of the weed.

The flower is in the axils of the leaf-like spines. The flower parts do not all fall off, but within them is developed the strange seed. This is simply a small, long, cylindrical-shaped seed or germ nearly the size of the shaft of a pin, forked at the lower or root end, and the whole coiled up into the form of a rather flat snail shell. Around this is a thin shell or covering, but no "meat" is laid up outside or around the germ as is the case in most seeds. The seed is greenish until quite ripe when it turns to a dark brownish color and changes to a fairly hard seed. But the important fact is that the seed belongs to that class which is easily penetrated by water, will germinate readily, and is not liable to live long in the soil, even if buried at some depth, as would such hard, oily seeds as mustard and clover.

Weeds large enough for good "tumblers" before the wind rarely grow among crops of small grain. They come from breaking, fallow ground, roadsides, freshly made mounds and like places where the native sod is temporarily destroyed and no strongly competing plants have as yet secured control. In fields of wheat the plants are crowded out of their natural ovoid or spreading form of growth and grow more or less erect among the grain. They rarely grow tall, but if the grain has only a poor chance to thicken its culms by "stooling," as was the case in the Dakotas during the dry June of last year, the weed grows in large numbers among the wheat, and in thin spots in the grain produces some large plants.

In seasons where the moisture enables the wheat to grow vigorously during the early part of the season most of the Russian tumbleweeds grow only very small or are crowded to death. Where they grow 1 to 2 feet high and rather thick among the wheat it is difficult to drive teams through them, the spines causing great pain to the horses' legs; and the harvester oftimes can not cut through the hard weeds, but must give way to the header, which is run above the thistles, taking only the heads of the grain. In rare cases the weeds grow as high as the wheat and even the header will not work. In cultivated crops, as potatoes and corn, the occasional weed left by the careless farmer is liable to develop into the most robust tumbleweed 2 to 5 feet in diameter, and in a crop of thin wheat the masses of the thistle grow large and thick enough so as to be massed together by the wind into approved "tumblers" of large size.

The great fact that this weed can and does travel from one farm to another; from waste or Government lands into the fields of careful husbandmen; from the corporate or public highways to adjacent or remote fields of the cleanly farmer, brings before our States and even the General Government a new condition—a sudden and imperative duty. The individual can not deal with this foe any more than he can protect himself from yellow fever let loose in the streets. The power of the Government to bring about a cooperative, enforced, systematic, and comprehensive fight must be brought into use before the pest has spread from the present comparatively small infested areas to the entire country. And if the State, possibly with aid and coöperation of the General Government, compels one man to prevent this weed from spreading from his lands, it assumes the responsibility of compelling every other landowner to likewise keep it in check, that he who complies with the law may accomplish his purpose and not merely spend labor and money and have the weed again come on his fields from surrounding lands.

During a recent visit to the infested region in South Dakota, I found that many farmers were making heroic efforts to keep this weed out of their own lands, but as the State does not execute its law compelling others to do the same, these farmers are placed at a great disadvantage, as their fields are constantly reinfested by the weeds being blown from roadways, public lands, and from the fields of other farmers.

This weed is not going to ruin Minnesota if it does gain entrance to every farm. But it is a good business proposition to invest enough of energy to prevent its ever getting a stronghold in the State. Every dollar spent on complete eradication will save hundreds in loss of crops and in the everlasting warfare which must be hereafter kept up if this pest is not subdued. A sharp, decisive contest is better than a weary, long-drawn fight which we can only bequeath to the coming generation. A successful fight would be a great and needed lesson in weed eradication.

Three alternatives are offered. First. Take no advantage from our association in organized towns, counties, States, and nation, but allow each farmer to fight his own battles with the weeds blowing on his lands during most months of the year from surrounding fields, roads, etc. Second. Make and execute laws preventing the ripening of all weeds which grow large enough to be blown before the wind, and to prevent their being spread by such means as railroads and grain dealers. This plan would result in the weed spreading only very slowly to sections not now infested. If the law were faithfully executed it would result in the farmer who strongly desired to keep his land clean of the weed being able to do so. The presence in all infested regions of small plants among grain and in other places where they would not develop into large weeds would, however, be a constant menace and source of trouble and expense. The seeds are rather light and have something of a wing which will enable the wind to carry them across snow in winter. Third. Make State laws under which, with some aid from the General Government, the weed might, if possible, be completely eradicated. If practicable this plan would in the end be far more economical. Killing out the last plant of so widely distributed a weed would indeed be difficult. No one has yet investigated the subject enough to be warranted in saying whether or not it is practicable, or not economy, to try to eradicate this pest as was done with pleuro-pneumonia in cattle.

This whole matter should be carefully considered from a purely business standpoint, and a plan devised whereby the States affected and even the General Government could unite in enacting laws under which all individuals, corporations, and governing powers could coöperate to handle this weed in the most businesslike and practical manner. A strong commission of men should be appointed to look up all the economic, the agricultural, the business, and the legal aspects of the case and report suggestions of a general plan under which the lawmaking bodies of States and Government could intelligently act. Recent careful study of the affected territory has made me a firm believer that the necessary energy and money to control, and possibly to eradicate, this weed could be expended by the farmers, the States, and the General Government to the advantage of all.

HOW TO ERADICATE THE RUSSIAN TUMBLE WEED IN MINNESOTA AND PREVENT ITS GETTING ON OUR FARMS.

A year's experience will tell us how to meet the difficulties. No one has heretofore been able to fight this weed alone. It is an annual, however, grows from the seed each year, and the plants are easily killed by means of the hoe, cultivator, or any tool or implement which will uproot or seriously disturb them. They are easily pulled up, and when turned under with the plow they die. The individuals are easily killed. If all plants large enough to travel before the wind are kept from ripening, the weed will not be very hard to eradicate on each farm.

By preventing plants from seeding for two years the pest would disappear. That might not be possible. But it looks reasonable that the plants could so nearly all be kept down for two years that occasional sources of remaining danger points could be found and looked after, and in a few years the land be freed entirely from the pest. The essential need is, not to allow any plants to mature seeds, especially plants large enough to roll. The seeds already ripe in the land should be encouraged to germinate that they may be killed by plow, hoe, frost and other agencies. There is no easy "cure-all," no specific except eternal vigilance; brains for a plan and willing hands on the spot to do the work at the right time.

The methods enumerated below are along the line we must act—they are written before, not after, the execution of the work, and apply to the section worst infested and to the scattering patches in Minnesota. They will suggest to the ingenious farmer and to the official what he can do under his conditions.

METHODS IN CULTIVATED LANDS.

1. The green manure fallow, when large fields must be dealt with, is valuable, if rightly managed, to kill Russian thistle, and other weeds as well. Two plowings are necessary. The best way is to plow shallow in May or June and sow half a bushel per acre of millet or 2 bushels of oats, and plow under when beginning to head out. The humus gotten into the soil will amply repay the cost of the seed for the green manure, though the thistles can be as effectively treated without the crop of green manure. After the last plowing the field should be gone over, with the hoe if necessary, to destroy stray plants.

2. Early fall plowing of stubble, done as soon as the grain can possibly be stacked or threshed, will kill most of the weeds if great care is given to thoroughness and plowing before any seeds are ripe enough to grow.

3. The bare fallow in some cases is the best means to use in cultivated lands. To make it the most effective the grain shocks of the previous crop should be stacked as soon as dry, not waiting to thresh out of the shock unless it can be done at once; and the stubble immediately plowed or even disked to kill unripe weeds or to bury ripe seeds that may surely be induced to germinate. The land in most sections should the next season be twice fallow-plowed, once in June or July, and where necessary at or after harvest. As practiced at present where the land lies from one harvest through the entire season, with only once fallow-plowing in midsummer, the bare fallow often is productive of the largest "tumblers," and spreads the weeds.

4. Annual hay crops grown instead of green manure will likewise serve a good purpose, and in sections where wild hay is no longer plentiful will pay as a crop. By very early fall plowing, then plowing shallow in spring and seeding to millet, oats, oats and peas, sowed corn, or other crop for cured forage, and again fall plowing very early, the Russian thistle will not have a chance to seed for two years, and will be practically killed out if no seeds are allowed to blow into the field.

5. Cultivated crops, early fall plowing, fallowing, among which every stray plant not killed by means of the cultivator is destroyed by the hoe, is a very effective means of killing out Russian tumble weed; and these crops, especially corn and potatoes, can be much extended with profit on our wheat farms, but poorly tended they are a source of infection. A few plants allowed room and cultivation will develop into the largest and most dangerous tumble weeds. Thorough work with the cultivator supplemented by complete hoe work up to the latter part of August will surely leave no plants with age enough to mature their seeds before frost.

6. Mowing and burning the stubbles and weeds as soon as the grain crop is off and before the weed seeds are ripe is a valuable means where the weeds are thick and can not be well turned under with the plow. This plan followed by one of the methods stated above would be effective. The Russian tumble weed and grain stubble will not as a rule burn readily in the fall, at least not until many of the seeds have ripened, unless first mowed and dried. In some cases they may be burned after mowing without raking, which is an advantage, as seeds are thus destroyed which might have escaped the mower. In other cases they must be more or less raked into piles. Plants mowed before the seeds are quite ripe will probably hold their seeds more tightly.

7. Mow or hoe patches in the grain fields where a poor stand of grain has allowed them to develop into large weeds. This is necessary to avoid trouble to teams and machines at harvest time, and also to prevent the development of large "tumblers," which if allowed to ripen may be blown about, scattering the seeds. Generally the scythe will do the work. The hoe or even the horse mowing machine may at times be better.

8. Plow under poor grain crops for green manure if they promise to pay but little more than the cost of harvesting and thrashing, and are filled with a thick growth of Russian tumble weeds. It sometimes pays to be heroic in this. The plowing can be done early when there is little pressing work to do. The green crop of hay and weeds will make much humus or fertility in the soil and a chance for double profits on the crop the next season. Sometimes green manuring and summer fallowing are objectionable means in dry, wind-swept sections on account of resulting blowing or drifting of the fine surface soil.

HIGHWAYS, RAILWAYS, GRASS LANDS, COMMONS, GROVES.

Total eradication outside of cultivated fields is not so easily accomplished as in the lands used for grain and hoed crops.

9. Infested highways which have been shaped up with the elevating grader or the reverseible road machine can be easily kept clean of the weeds by one or few dressings during the summer with the reversible road machine. Plants which escape this treatment can be cut with hoe. In some cases it will pay to "break and back-set" the roadway to kill out the weeds. The farmer can use this land for crops or it can soon be seeded down to grass, timothy, Kentucky blue grass; red top and white clover being the best mixture I can recommend. Road ditches should be built of such shape or form that they are not weed strongholds. Road officers should look sharply after the weeds in all highways and see that the farmers keep them from seeding along their lands or that the roads are kept free of weeds at the expense of the township. Farmers should be encouraged to farm the land to the wheel track along infested highways.

10. Along rough highways and on the railway right of way "breaking and back-setting," possibly followed by a year of bare fallowing, then the next year seeding to grass, will sometimes be the most economical measure. Usually the hoe thoroughly applied is the best remedy. The scythe leaves low-lying branches uncut to ripen seeds. Our railway right of ways as well as our highways in all sections of country should be left in such shape, when being constructed, that they can be seeded to grasses which are easily mowed or "back fired," both to lessen the number of escaping fires and to abate the weed nuisance.

11. Pastures and meadows, whether native or wild, need attention. "Breaking and back-setting," then growing crops, and treating, as in 1 to 8 above, is safest. In grass lands left undisturbed, the hoe in the hands of careful men in August is probably the best means. A foreman on horseback following and constantly inspecting the work of a gang of a dozen men could rapidly get over the prairie or tame pasture or meadow and do the work effectively and cheaply, as in a similar way we pull mustard. Prof. Bolley, of North Dakota experiment station, says: "A comparatively small force of workmen would suffice to destroy all weeds upon road margins and the wild lands of the worst infested townships in the State." Thus could the larger weeds, which develop in gopher mounds, fire breaks, and similar places on the prairies, be destroyed, and the plants, kept small by the thick growth of grass, might thus be gradually eradicated.

12. Cities and towns in Minnesota in which this weed has obtained a hold should, in the common interest, and in justice to the farmers who patronize them, at once take measures to prevent not only all large plants from blowing about and spreading the weed, but see that no seeds are ripened in the next years. Cities and towns are strongholds for this pest which the farmers can not reach; and as towns are now centers from which the weed is spreading there is nothing improper in their taking the initiative. Every waste lot or block in every town or city should be broken and sowed to Kentucky blue grass and white clover. Aside from keeping out this and other weed pests, such a practice would make our towns look much prettier and cleaner.

13. Prevention of spreading.—The greatest barrier to the spreading of the Russian tumble weed is the prevention of all plants growing large enough to roll before the wind. If every township can be so organized this summer as to prevent spreading by the wind, each farmer can successfully fight his own battles, and all working together could in two or three years eradicate the weed. Railroads have helped to spread it. They should vigorously set about cleaning it off their right of way and out of their depot yards. Township road overseers and citizens should not hesitate to notify the railroad of the presence of the weeds on the right of way and in depot yards, and to see that the companies look after keeping their properties clean.

14. Fences catch the "tumblers" and keep them out of the field. Wire fences serve a good purpose, though the weeds often pile high and blow over. Three rows of Russian sunflower around a field inside the fence, rows 3 to 4 feet apart and seeds a foot or less apart in the row and well cultivated, so as to grow tall and strong, would make something of a hedge, but are only temporary and not very promising. The heads make good feed for poultry and other stock, while the stalks remain erect all winter. Willow hedges in double rows 30 feet apart, and cuttings a foot apart in the row make the best of hedges. A row or two of plums between the two rows of willows is suggested as an improvement. Hedges and timber belts, however, are the hardest place from which to rid out the last weed, because hard to cultivate.

15. Ripe seeds should be burned wherever it is possible to burn the field over or to burn piles of the weeds. Thus will it be possible to kill very many seeds in the spring or late in the fall. Wherever an opportunity offers in a strong wind in dry weather unusual efforts should be put forth to burn stubble and prairie grass. Mowing, raking, and then burning will also assist to kill many weeds. An iron drag with team hitched 12 feet away by means of a gas-pipe crosstree and chains or wires and dragged through the field of ripe thistles, with fire burning the thistles caught in the drag as it is run along the side of the field and against the wind—is often the most practical way of burning ripe Russian thistles.

GENERAL PRECAUTIONS.

Infested flax, millet, and buckwheat seeds, or seeds of other crops harvested late in the fall after the Russian thistle has ripened, cause the spread of this weed. Farmers should carefully examine all seeds coming from a distance and discard all having seeds of this or any other noxious weed. As these seeds are rather light they can be nearly all cleaned out of most kinds of grain by using a common fanning mill with its blast and sieves properly adjusted.

Railways and individuals handling grains, stock, or other farm products from infested districts should be compelled to use care in cleaning cars at only certain places where the weeds may be destroyed and to use proper care in preventing the spread of this weed.

LAWS ARE NEEDED.

The two Dakotas have fairly good laws, and Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa, and Wisconsin, and possibly other States, should each at the earliest possible opportunity enact laws making it obligatory for the proper officials of each township, city, and county to see that this weed is controlled. As to whether it is practicable to entirely eradicate the Russian thistle from the country, there is a diversity of reasonable opinion. But that the State and General Government owes to every farmer enough of protection that this seed may not be blown upon his fields from surrounding lands and roadways all must admit. Whether it is wise for the Government to aid the States in a trial at utter eradication is one question; the consideration of practical laws looking to preventing the ripening and blowing about of all weeds large enough to roll before the wind is another question. Any of these States refusing to do at least this much is not loyal to its own citizens nor careful of the interests of its neighbors. And the Government to be loyal to one or two of its young States and their farmers may find it wise to give material support as well as its great moral support to laws looking to the eradication of this new pest.

The individual farmer can fight his own battle if the State will provide so that he need not fight it over again the next year. It might be far cheaper in the end to entirely eradicate the weed than to continually fight it, as the farmer must be given a chance to keep his land clean if he is so disposed. With the weeds blowing upon his farm every year he must adapt his farming to the presence of this weed, and the farmers in affected districts recognize this as a very serious pest. Real-estate dealers, however, do not all recognize that this or any other disadvantage exists in their section of the country. Let the State make and execute a good law and three-fourths of our farmers, if not nearly all, would learn that total eradication on their own lands is economy. It would not be very difficult to execute a law preventing the ripening of all the large weeds. This would in the main stop the rapid spread of the weed and its entire eradication could be taken up in any section or in the entire country.

Every farmer should try to prevent the ripening of all "tumblers" on his lands and in the township and county. He should also favor and work for the making and the execution of some reasonable, comprehensive, and efficient laws. Figures 2 and 3 show Russian tumble weed at stage when nearly ready to blossom and when all stray plants should be destroyed as recommended in sections 9 to 15.

Mr. BOEN. Now, Mr. Speaker, as the representative of one of the greatest wheat-growing districts in the country, which is threatened with the destruction of its interests by the spread of this thistle, I ask that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] be sustained and that we stand by the action of the Senate in this matter.

Mr. SNODGRASS. If the powers of the General Government are to be abused in this way, the gentleman should include cockleburrs, and running briers, and sassafras sprouts, and sage grass, and all that.

Mr. BOEN. Very well, if you represent a district which is threatened with destruction by those things, make your motion and we will stand by you.

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER].

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I know the difficulty there is in the House in resisting the recommendations of the Committee on Agriculture in reference to this matter. I understand that the theory of this appropriation is not that our people are going to surrender to this Russian thistle. I know all about this weed. One trouble which we have to contend with in our Northwestern country is that we have such an abundantly rich soil that this weed, like other forms of vegetation, becomes so enlarged that it is difficult to deal with.

It grows up in that fertile ground, and I have seen plenty of these weeds when ripe from 3 to 4 feet high and at least 6 feet in diameter. We have such rich soil that we produce these weeds to a very large size. Now, the theory on which this appropriation should be granted is not so much, as I understand it, to help our individual farmer as it is that the Government should defend itself. The trouble is here. I have a quarter of section of land in my State and on two or three sides of that land is Government land. I may exterminate this thistle on my land, but next year it is reseeded from the Government land, and so it will be year after year until somebody takes possession of that land, and I will be compelled year after year to get these thistles off my land and it will be reseeded again. It is the duty of the Government, gentlemen, to take care of its own. It is its duty to keep this land so that settlers can go on to it.

Mr. FUNK. I would like to ask the gentleman to explain why there is so much Government land if it is such valuable and productive land, and why is it not taken up by settlers?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, there is a great deal of land in the West where the population of this country has been going to the cities in the last few years, but I want to tell the gentleman from Illinois that there is plenty of land out there yet that is as good or better than that in the State of Illinois, and there is no country where there are so many consecutive acres of land and none of it waste land, as in North and South Dakota, and in that I defy contradiction.

Mr. LUCAS. And it did not take forty years to settle it.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Is it not a fact that this seed will not take hold except in cultivated land?

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; it will grow along the roadside, where the plow has never been, or anywhere stock have been tramping about. It does not grow well on the prairie until stock has tramped it in.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The Secretary of Agriculture stated to me in a conversation the other day that the Government land was safe from it, because it would only take hold in cultivated land.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; that is a mistake. It grows along the roadside, where the stock tramp, and along the creek. I know all about that, so far as that idea is concerned.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The Secretary of Agriculture certainly made that statement to me the other day in a conversation.

Mr. PICKLER. He is wrong, so far as that is concerned.

The trouble is the Government keeps this seed on its land in sufficient amount to reseed our lands from year to year. We are not a powerless people, just as the farmers of Brown County said in this meeting they had. Our farmers would ask no help so far as taking this off their own lands is concerned. We are able to do that. We are a thrifty and industrious people who are not afraid of work; we are developing that great country; but we say it is not fair that our land shall be reseeded year after year with this Russian thistle from the Government lands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, in the great pressure for time I do not wish to attempt to touch the points that other gentlemen have covered much better than I could do; but there are two or three things I wish to have brought to the attention of the House before the vote is taken upon this question. The first two points are as to the responsibility of the General Government for this pest. One thing is sure—that a great pest is threatening the agricultural interests of this country, and that it has grown from a mere handful of seeds fifteen years ago until now it is a pest that destroys $5,000,000 worth of agricultural products annually; that the introduction of those seeds was entirely beyond the control of the will of the farmers of the West and entirely against their knowledge or consent, and, under the laws of the United States, in a way that they had no possibility of protecting themselves from.

The pest was imported in some flaxseed from Russia that came through the custom-house and was subject to the sole and exclusive inspection of the custom-house officers of the United States. They let it pass through, and we residents of the agricultural Northwest are not responsible for its existence in this country; but we are endeavoring as best we can by individual and State effort to defend ourselves, as well as those to whom it has not yet extended, against its destructive spread.

The other point I wish to make as to the responsibility of the Government is that the Government is the fee-title proprietor on whose lands much of this thistle seed that infests the land of private owners is grown. Our farmers can easily enough each destroy the seeds on their own farms, but with millions of these thistles going to seed undisturbed on the adjoining public lands, individual efforts are almost futile. This Russian thistle grows up in a spherical form, like a great "tumble" weed. When it matures and gets dry and hard in the fall of the year and the wind blows, the tap root breaks, and as the wind blows it will roll along like a bicycle, as fast as the wind. It will roll for perhaps 50 miles in a single day, spreading seed as it goes, because in those prairie countries we have no streams and no forest, no fences, nothing to stop a weed of this kind when it is blown by the wind.

In addition to that, the seed of this weed is scattered in the snow after it has been thrashed out of the weed in rolling over the ground. If a man built up a wire fence to shut out this tumbling weed he would have to build it 20 feet in order to obstruct its passage where great masses of it would accumulate. Even if he succeeds in shutting the stems and branches out that way with a tight wire fence the fine seeds will shell out and drift along in the snow. You gentlemen who have had any experience in the country between the top of the Rocky Mountains and the pineries know that the snow does not fall down perpendicularly as it does here. It falls some place, nobody hardly knows where, and it comes creeping along on the surface of the earth, and these seeds are sifted into the snow as the weeds go tumbling over the prairie, and they, the seeds, will creep along in the drifting snow for 50 miles again, perhaps, after you have stopped the tumbling of the weeds themselves. Anyone would know that with such a weed in such a country it is just as impossible for each individual farmer to protect his own land from the seeds that drift along in the snow as it would be to build a fence which is snow-tight; and everybody knows that it is much harder to make even a roof snow-tight than it is to make it rain-tight.

Snow will come through where even rain can not come through. So much for the difficulty of shutting out this by fencing, cultivation, or any other method of individual or even neighborhood effort. This pest has already scattered over seven different States. It is as far east as Milwaukee. It is as far south as Kansas. The Government owns a very large per cent of the land in that part of the country. A million dollars is a large sum, to be sure, yet it would be less than 1 cent an acre on the 125,000,000 acres of Government lands that are situated within the infected and threatened region. In North Dakota, for example, with 45,000,000 acres of land, 21,000,000 acres still belong to the Government of the United States.

You gentlemen, the Congress of the United States, are acting to-day in the capacity of agents for the people who are the owners, the proprietors of 21,000,000 acres of land in my State, and no matter how well I may cultivate my land, no matter how well every farmer there may cultivate his land, no matter how well all the railroads and private owners may care for their lands, this infection will come to them from the lands still owned by the Government. It is true that the seeds of this weed will not catch on the solid-sodded prairie, but everywhere there are little gopher knolls, badger knolls, cattle tracks, wagon tracks; and at the least break in the sod these drifting seeds will catch and form another center of infection.

Mr. HATCH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the proposition to appropriate a million dollars in aid of the agriculturists of certain portions of this country strikes me as one of the most marvelous propositions ever made in the Congress of the United States. You might as well propose, sir, an appropriation to extirpate the cocklebur, which is the great scourge of the cotton fields of the South, the great enemy of the cotton-planters and of the woolgrowers of the South.

The man who was perhaps the most successful woolgrower in the United States, Mr. Mark Cockrell, of Tennessee; the man who raised in the State of Mississippi, in the county adjoining that in which I live, the wool which took the premium in the world's fair in London, I was told by my old friend, Mr. RICHARDSON, would ride a mile out of his way to pull up a cocklebur. Those weeds are the great enemy of the sheep-raising industry of the South, and I think an appropriation for the extirpation of them would at least be as appropriate as this proposed appropriation of a million dollars to exterminate the Russian thistle.

The proposition that the Congress of the United States is to take the money of the people of all portions of the country and appropriate it in this way is so marvelous a departure from the original principles and objects of the Government that I am astounded that it should receive consideration for one moment on the part of members of this body.

There is another enemy of the agriculturist in the region in which I live—and, though a lawyer by profession, I myself have been an agriculturist all my life, and am still—there is another enemy of the agriculturist there that requires attention, and if the Government of the United States is to take charge of the agricultural interests of particular localities, it ought to undertake the extermination of this, which is a far more formidable weed than the Russian thistle. I refer to that extraordinary grass known as cocoa grass, which has spread over large areas in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, until to-day many of the richest lands of Louisiana have been abandoned because of its encroachments. As well, sir, might the Government make an appropriation of a million dollars extirpate the cocoa grass, and I take it for granted that its efforts in that direction would have about the same results as the efforts of a gentleman who told me of an experiment he had made on his own plantation in Louisiana. He said that the cocoa grass first appeared in his garden and that he dug up the little nut which produced it, and dug some 20 feet and supposed that he had thoroughly extirpated it; that he then replaced the ground, and that when he got up the next morning and walked out into his garden the cocoa grass was there as thick as the hair on a dog's back. [Laughter.]

It is said that it grows absolutely through to the other side of the earth; and an old Irishman, who had received strict orders to dig it up and exterminate it, after he had done all he could in that direction, said, "Shure, it doesn't make any difference how deep I go, or whether I go clear through, it will still be there." [Laughter.] I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Agriculture will be instructed to report an appropriation to extirpate the cocklebur and the cocoa grass if this Senate amendment is to stand.

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HAINER].

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from a State which is devoted almost exclusively to agriculture, I am naturally interested in everything which tends to the advancement of that great industry. I must confess, however, that I do not regard this amendment as in that line. Nebraska has been spoken of as one of the States infected with this Russian thistle. I wish to say that I never heard of it until after certain bills looking to the eradication of that plant had been introduced into Congress.

The proposition struck me as remarkable in every sense of the word, and I undertook to investigate the matter. I corresponded with gentlemen who stand high in scientific circles, and are well known as friends of agriculture as well as being in position to know, in order that I might ascertain what the real facts were. Allow me to read one reply which I received as a fair sample of others which I will place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. I received this letter from Prof. J. L. Budd, professor of agriculture in Iowa. My friends from that State will recognize him, as will all who are interested in agriculture, as a man who stands in the forefront of the scientific agriculturists of the world. This is what he says:

IOWA AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
DEPARTMENT OF HORTICULTURE,
Ames, Iowa, March 15, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Your kind favor received. The clipping I inclose was written for my department of the Iowa State Register and about tells the story in regard to the Russian thistle. The many abandoned farms in Dakota furnish the exact conditions favorable for growing and ripening the plant. With fairly good farming it is quite a harmless annual weed. It does not thrive in meadows or pastures and our cereals are cut too early for it to ripen seed. In Russia I did not see one spot west of the Volga where it ripened its seeds in masses as reported on the abandoned homesteads and tree claims of Dakota.

Yours, with respect,

J. L. BUDD.

Hon. E. J. HAINER.

RUSSIAN THISTLE.

A Register reader in Polk County writes:

"Every paper I see has something to say about the Russian thistle. It appears to be a kind of fad, and Secretary Morton is violently attacked for mildly suggesting that he could see no good reason for using the Government funds in an attempt to eradicate it. You spent a summer in Russia and must know something about it, yet I have not seen a word from you in regard to it. Is it, in your opinion, as much of a nuisance as the Canadian thistle?"

East of the Volga on the dry steppes northeast of the Caspian it is a common weed. Its common name is "tumbleweed." As winter comes on the north wind piles it up in the hollows, and even in little bays of the Caspian in queer fantastic shapes. But in the thickly settled sections I heard no complaints. Properly managed it is a harmless weed. In pastures the stock will keep it down. In meadows at haying time it is yet young and tender, and after haying it does not get up into rolling or seeding size. In wheat fields and other grain fields it is kept down by plowing under the stubble as soon as possible after harvest.

In the extensive beet sugar districts this weed gives less trouble than many others, as it is one of the easiest to kill by cultivation and hoeing. It is the same in cornfields and with other cultivated crops. Yet it is a bad weed in certain ways. If not looked after it will get a hold along our highways, railways, out-town lots, and on the farms of slack cultivators, and when it has a full season for development it becomes a large, coarse, thorny, rolling contrivance that will move in our autumn winds at a lively pace. On the well-managed farm it will be easier to manage than our Foxtail, but with the slip-shod farmer it will be a rival of the Canada thistle. But this difference should be noted: I would not hesitate to buy a farm well salted with Russian thistle, as it is an annual, easy to run out or at least to manage so as to do no special harm. But the farm set to Canada thistles, as are thousands of acres north of Wheaton, Ill., I would not give much for. It may be possible to run it out, but it is a tedious and expensive process.

Mr. PICKLER. But Prof. Budd was never up where these things grow; he has never seen them.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Now, let us take the testimony of Prof. Williams, from the gentleman's own State—a professor of botany in the South Dakota Agricultural College; and here is what he says:

It (the weed) is easily killed by cultivation. It is an annual and the seeds will germinate and come up even though buried very deep. Then if it is thoroughly cleared off the land one year none will appear the next unless the seed comes from other localities. The seed will not stay in the ground, as it is so poorly protected that unless it germinates the first year it rots.

Mr. PICKLER. That is just the point.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I have here an extract from the Oakes (N. Dak.) Republican to the same effect. I have also a letter from Mr. Bushnell, editor of the Dakota Farmer, the leading North Dakota agricultural paper, a gentleman to whom I was referred by the representative from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] as the best possible authority.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I would like to have a little more time.

Mr. HATCH. I yield the gentlemen two minutes more.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. This gentleman says over his own sign manual:

OFFICE OF DAKOTA FARMER,
Aberdeen, S. Dak., February 26, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 22d, and hasten to reply.

The Russian thistle is certainly doing great damage in the two Dakotas as well as in adjoining States. I have no apology to make for it. It will be a serious drawback to wheat farming, especially in the Dakotas, and will doubtless be the immediate cause of serious losses in this direction. It is not properly named, as it really is an annual—and a "cactus." Spreads its seeds by rolling like the tumbleweed, and there is seed enough in a single weed to seed down a township. I do not believe that a million of dollars, if every cent was wisely expended, would begin to exterminate it. If a single plant were left to go to seed it would be but a few years, under favorable conditions, when this country would be as badly covered again as it is now. For this and other reasons I believe that our farmers have got to "work out their own salvation" in dealing with it. If enough money could be appropriated and every township could be organized and enlisted in a general movement, it is probable that it would receive a serious check, and this would be most welcome, but the opinion of myself and others is that under a haphazard "contract" system but little permanent good would be accomplished.

You are at liberty to use this in any reasonable way desired.

Very respectfully,

W. F. T. BUSHNELL,
Editor and Publisher.

Hon. E. J. HAINER, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF DAKOTA FARMER,
Aberdeen, S. Dak., March 26, 1894.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting Brown County Farmers' Institute, held in this city the 19th, 20th, and 21st—at the session of the 21st, in the afternoon, the attached resolution was passed.

Brown is the largest county in area in this State, and the greatest wheat-producing county in the United States. In the midst of the Russian thistle at the present time—the very heart of the "war."

Very respectfully,

W. F. T. BUSHNELL, Publisher.

Hon. E. J. HAINER, Washington.

The Russian thistle received attention at the last Brown County Farmers' Institute. Since Brown County is in the very heart of the region where the thistles have obtained a foothold, the following resolution passed at that time is significant:

"Resolved, That the reports made in the East of the damage caused by the so-called Russian thistle in this region has been greatly exaggerated, to the detriment of our State, and that we, farmers of Brown County in institute assembled, know that by thorough cultivation we will be able to successfully deal with this annual weed."

I desire to place in the RECORD certain other letters and extracts which I have not time to read. I ask consent that I may incorporate them in my remarks.

There was no objection.

BROWNSVILLE, NEBR., February 26, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Returning from Lincoln, I find yours February 22, and hasten to reply.

I hand you herewith Bulletin No. 31, issued by the United States experiment station for Nebraska, edited and compiled by Prof. Charles E. Bessey, botanist for the Nebraska State Board of Agriculture. It has been extensively circulated. Also a circular issued by myself, both concerning the "Russian thistle." They will explain themselves more fully and in detail than I can advise by letter, as to the character of this weed and its encroachments upon Nebraska domain.

That the Russian thistle is a terrible weed pest, and from its nature difficult to handle successfully, no one will for a moment call in question.

The article in State Journal to which you refer was published as literature on that subject, for what information it might impart.

Personally, I do not believe there can be any feasible governmental scheme for the prevention or extermination of the Russian thistle, either State or national, in the way of appropriation and expenditure of public money. The only feasible legislation in this matter I can imagine would be a law compelling the owner and tiller of land to perform a duty they owe to both themselves and their land, namely, to keep it clear of this weed. While I here speak only for myself, I am quite sure I reflect the opinion of thoughtful, intelligent men in this State. I might elaborate this line of thought, but the expression given is perhaps sufficient for your purpose.

I have not read the bill pending before Congress, and do not know its details. Therefore, with the light before me, and on general principles, I have not faith in its practicability.

We aim to render all possible aid to prevent further foothold and to stamp out as rapidly as may be this unwelcome invader.

Yours, sincerely,

ROBERT W. FURNAS.

Hon. E. J. HAINER, Washington City, D. C.

[Nebraska State Journal, February 19, 1894.]

THE RUSSIAN THISTLE.

It is said to be an "ill wind that blows nobody good." While the Russian thistle is just now commanding a degree of attention seldom given a weed pest, there are those who are disposed to look on the bright side in the matter. Prof. Bessey says it is most dangerous when dead, as it is then it diffuses itself.

D. Roberts, of Dakota, writes in the Dakota Farmer, from which we extract:

"It is an old saying that nothing was made in vain, and I believe it is correct. I believe this to be true of the thistles. With all this howl and cry about the damage, please tell me who has thought of turning it to account? Experience teaches that it is worth as much or more than red clover for sheep pasture. Now, if this is true, and I am confident it is, then, I ask, why should it not be worth as much as a fertilizer? In this I can only give my opinion. I believe if plowed under when in blossom, or just before it blossoms, it would be equal to a heavy crop of green clover plowed under, as a fertilizer. Farmers, try it. I believe it is just what we want here in Dakota, for it would grow when clover would die out on account of the drouth.

"The dryest time is when the thistle does the best. Then, again, I ask the farmers to try this plan: Take a piece well seeded to thistles; sow 4 to 8 quarts of millet seed per acre; pulverize and drag it down smooth, and roll. Let the thistles and millet grow. Just before the thistles blossom—when the stalk is tender and brittle, so you can take the stem between your thumb and finger and break it—just before it begins to get woody, go in with the mower and cut it down. Cure it well and put it up for hay, and my word for it, any stock on the farm will leave the best clear millet hay and eat the thistle hay. What better do you want? The dryest year you can put up 3 tons per acre on good ground, and, after taking off your hay, if you have sheep, you will have to watch them all the time to keep them off the ground you have mown. They will go at every opportunity to eat the young, tender shoots that start up. I for one am opposed to any move or appropriation being made by the Government to fight the thistle. I object to any law compelling me to destroy an article that is a benefit to me because it is a damage to other men who wish to follow a system of farming that will ruin any man and any country.

"The system I refer to is wheat-raising year after year upon the same land. I am well aware that under the present system of farming—wheat-raising—the thistle does great damage, but when you keep plenty of stock to use up the feed that is constantly going to waste, and only seed half the number of acres of wheat, sowing the land every other year and pasturing the land every alternate year, I believe we will raise more wheat, keep up the fertility of the soil, and the stock, well managed, will make us more money than wheat. Farmers, I have written this to call your earnest attention to this matter in a different light than you have been looking at it. I say we can handle this matter. I do not ask for any help from the Government or from my neighbors to handle my thistles. Think of this matter. If it is handled by the Government, what would it amount to? You would be compelled to destroy all thistles on your land. If you did not or could not, it would be done by the commissioner and charged up against you and collected in taxes in some form."

A WOMAN'S WISHES.

HILLSBORO, January 21.

To the Forum:

I want to tell you what a farmer's wife would like to see done in North Dakota in the year 1894.

Mr. HANSBROUGH refuted for publishing to the world news of the Russian cactus, asking a million dollars to help eradicate it, as though we were such an inert, helpless people we could not pull our own weeds.

I would like to see those wise men who went down the Southwestern to look at the cactus specimen five or six feet across, and who adjourned to go and tell their neighbors to wake up and get up a petition to the governor to call a special meeting of the Legislature to deal with the weeds.

Ask them to appoint their weed commission with full power to deal quickly with all weeds, just as our veterinary friends deal with the glanders. No waiting for red tape, but full power to plow and to pull and collect from land to pay for same. If they do not, Mr. HANSBROUGH will be asking for a million to buy leather leggins to put on the horses to cut the crop.

UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA, Lincoln, Nebr., February 24, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Under another cover I send you copies of my bulletin "The Russian Thistle in Nebraska," which will give you full information as to this vile pest which has come to us. Since the preparation of the bulletin I have learned of so many more localities that I am of the opinion that scarcely a county is entirely free from it. In the marked bulletin I have corrected up the map (in part at least).

It is without question one of the worst weeds which has ever made its appearance in the country. In the "Appendix" I quote from various authorities in Dakota and elsewhere, to show what other people think of it. Some of them think that the General Government ought to take hold of the matter. This I do not believe. It would, in my opinion, be unwise to make an appropriation from the public Treasury for this purpose. It is a calamity—no doubt about that—but there would be a greater one if that $1,000,000 should be poured out for its extermination. I hope you will vote against any such squandering of the public funds.

Nebraska and Nebraskans can take care of this weed without external aid, and the Dakota people ought to do likewise.

I have already written to Secretary Morton giving my views on this matter essentially as above, and I trust that you and all other Nebraskans in Congress will vote against the measure. The weed is a bad one, but we will take care of it ourselves, if the General Government will allow us.

Cordially,

CHARLES E. BESSEY.

Hon. E. J. HAINER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Does Prof. Budd or do any of those professors take up the question of these thistles on Government land, which reseed our farms every year?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. No.

Mr. PICKLER. Why do you not address yourself to that question?

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. I will do so; and I will say to the gentleman that no man has testified before our committee, and no evidence can be found there or elsewhere that this weed has any considerable foothold on Government land. In fact every witness who appeared before us testified that it could not have a foothold on sod and that it appeared only in a few scattered places wherever there might happen to be gopher mounds or something of that sort.

Mr. PICKLER. That happens very often. Of course a professor in Iowa does not know much about this question; he was never up there.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska. These letters speak for themselves. The gentlemen writing them have a national and some of them an international reputation. Their word and good judgment will not be questioned. No sensible man would hesitate to accept their statement of fact and conclusions if it were proposed to pay for this business out of his own pocket.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers of Nebraska do not ask for this appropriation. They are interested in wise legislation protecting their industry, but they do not ask the Government to pull weeds for them.

They are willing to consent to some paternalism, though they do not like to pay for it, but they draw the line on maternalism.

Legislation of this kind always defeats its own purpose. It is impossible for the Government to carry on a systematic campaign against weeds. The thrifty individual farmer will take care of his own land, the shiftless will grow the thistle to be paid for exterminating it if the Government embarks in that business. Pass this amendment and you will have more thistles next year than you have now. The extent of its spreading is very greatly exaggerated, and in only a few localities has it done serious damage. I challenge proof of the fact that it has destroyed the crops of a single good farmer. Not an instance of the kind has been given us. Our Western farmers will not thank these overzealous friends who advocate this sop for them to be used hereafter as a precedent to appropriate many millions for making still other places for ward heelers out of a job. You will not gain the good will of the farmers by furnishing them with salaried "weed pullers." Do something practical, gentlemen, or adjourn.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry: If the motion of the gentleman from Iowa should prevail, that will be a vote in favor of the appropriation of a million dollars?

The SPEAKER. That will pass the bill with the appropriation. If the motion should be voted down, it will be equivalent to nonconcurrence and the ordering of a further conference.

The question being taken—

Mr. BOEN called for a division.

Mr. HATCH. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HATCH and Mr. GEAR were appointed to act as tellers during the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 50, nays 175, not voting 126; as follows:

On motion of Mr. HATCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to concur in the Senate amendment was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, GEORGIA.

Mr. WOLVERTON, by unanimous consent, submitted a report from the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (H. R. 7461) to amend an act entitled "An act to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Georgia," etc.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES T. PEALE.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes past 2 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs, which has pending a measure. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6672) to place James T. Peale on the retired list of the Army.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAYERS. Had not the hour expired yesterday when this bill was called? The bill was simply reported back to the House by the Committee of the Whole without recommendation, and in a few minutes afterwards the hour expired. I believe that was the status.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is the pending bill.

Mr. SAYERS. It was not acted upon at all.

The SPEAKER. It was not.

Mr. SAYERS. The committee rose a few moments before the hour expired.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. The committee rose, however, by a sort of unanimous consent on a statement from the gentleman from Ohio that this would be the pending measure in the next hour.

Mr. SAYERS. I did not so understand. Does the RECORD show the fact?

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I do not know; I have not examined the RECORD. Mr. OUTHWAITE made the statement, however.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the committee a number of times—various committees of the Senate and House.

Mr. SAYERS. I insist that this bill should go into the committee.

The SPEAKER. It must be considered in Committee of the Whole if the point is made.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HALL of Missouri in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill the title of which has been read by the Clerk.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] is recognized.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this bill and the substantial parts of the report were read yesterday. I will make a brief statement of the merits of the case as they have been presented to the committee. This gentleman entered the service of the United States as a volunteer, served for some four years, and very shortly thereafter entered the regular service, and served continuously, with the exception of a few days, until 1880. The total service that he rendered was more than eighteen years. During that time he had more than the ordinary vicissitudes of military life. He was imprisoned, and while in prison contracted the disability from which he still suffers, namely, hemorrhoids. He commanded some very unusual military expeditions, in one of which he went through a long snow ride, while in the regular service, the result of which was to leave him almost blind.

In 1880 he had served, as I say, more than eighteen years, and during that whole time he had only eighteen days leave of absence for all causes. His particular disorder, the hemorrhoids, joined with the intensity of the sufferings which he had undergone from his snow ride and other causes, had made him very nervous and irritable, it is very probable, and had spoiled him as a social companion. He was not altogether a favorite with those who were immediately about him, but that did not detract from the fact that he had been once or twice brevetted for gallant and meritorious services, and had been steadily promoted, and won the confidence of his fellow-officers so far that they were willing to intrust him with independent command.

In his failing health he had contracted the habit of occasionally drinking. He was remonstrated with by some of his fellows, and finally entered into an agreement with one of them by which he was to become a total abstainer. It was understood at the time that he was making this agreement that, in order to enable him to attend to his private affairs after eighteen years of service, and in a degree to recover his health, he should be allowed leave of absence. This he failed to receive as promptly as he had hoped for it, and in fact it never was granted to him. Thereupon, in a somewhat despondent condition, he met the identical officer, a man greatly his superior in rank, who asked him to drink with him. He said, "But I have signed an agreement with you that I will not drink." "Well," said his superior, "you made this agreement with me, and I will let you off this time. We will go into the clubhouse and have a drink." They went into the clubhouse, and that evening at 8 o'clock he was under the influence of liquor.

Before going into the clubhouse, during the course of the day, this man had received a detail as officer of the day for the succeeding day, his tour of duty to begin at 8 o'clock. Ordinarily he would have been in perfect condition for the detail, but while he was in the house in the evening—twelve hours before his detail had been ordered to commence—he received a personal and peremptory order to immediately report for duty at 8 o'clock that evening as officer of the day. That disclosed his condition. Charges were brought against him, and he was cashiered for being intoxicated upon duty. That is the substantial charge upon which he was dismissed from the service.

The committee considered that that was not exactly a fair thing, but that there was a little of what looked like trickery and very great oppression in such an act, and so they have recommended that this act of injustice should, after this long lapse of time, be corrected, and that this man should be restored to a position, far below what he would have had if he had remained in the service, and that owing to his loss of health, arising from his service, he should be placed upon the retired list.

As shown yesterday in the reading of the concluding part of the committee, the officer who preferred the charges against him, Maj. Gen. Miles, of the United States Army, has recommended his restoration, and a great number of credentials and certificates are filed, showing his subsequent good conduct.

I have very little to add to this. I desire to emphasize the fact that the officer who preferred the charges against him, himself something of a disciplinarian, has asked for a favorable consideration of his application for restoration, and has certified to his high and honorable conduct while he was in the service and to his gallantry. This man has been punished by an absence from the Army of thirteen and a half years. He is now an old man as such things go, broken in health and impoverished. I ask for the favorable consideration of the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BLACK] would withdraw this bill from further consideration until certain facts could be inquired into, and it be ascertained whether they were entirely true, as reported to me. I have been told that this officer who now seeks restoration to the Army after having been dismissed for drunkenness, was also discharged from the Pension Office for the same reason, and that this was within the last two or three years. I was also informed in the presence of the officer himself on last Sunday evening that he was in the habit of going on periodical drunks, and the gentleman did not deny the truth of what was stated to me. Now, it does occur to me that in view of these facts, if they be true, Congress should not restore him to the Army for the purpose of putting him upon the retired list. All that I ask is an opportunity to inquire into the facts.

It seems that his habits were bad in this particular before he gave the pledge. He gave the pledge and then broke it, a court martial followed, and he was dismissed from the service. Now, these are the facts as I have been told, and it does occur to me that the gentleman ought not to press the consideration of this bill upon the House at this time.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to admit the correctness of any statement that the gentleman has made in regard to the present habits or the cause of the dismissal of this man. I have an entirely different impression in regard to it; but the statements made by the gentleman are such that if true they would probably considerably influence the judgment of the House, and inasmuch as the gentleman from Texas has made these statements, which have never been brought to the attention of the committee, and which to a certain extent rest now only on hearsay, I think that his request that I withdraw the bill is not an unreasonable one.

Mr. SAYERS. I will say to the gentleman that the facts which I have stated of course were told to me. I never saw the gentleman at all until last Sunday evening, when he came to see me, and the gentleman who accompanied him stated that he was in the habit of getting on periodical drunks. I read all the statements from ministers of the gospel and justices of the peace, etc., as printed in the report, and I inquired into his present condition in reference to the use of alcoholic stimulants, and then he himself told me of the difficulty he had in the Pension Office, and that he was discharged from the Pension Office, and that it was claimed that he was discharged on account of being drunk.

It is fair to him to say that he denied it to me. Then I began to inquire of the gentleman who was with him as to his present habits; and he said that he was in the habit of getting on periodical drunks; and the officer remarked to me that that was because he was poor, and he had been dismissed from the Army and was in trouble, but that if he were restored there would be no more of it.

Now, I desire to find out from the Pension Office whether that information be true or not; and I will submit to the gentleman from Illinois the answer I receive from the Pension Office.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. If the gentleman establishes the correctness of that proposition, I shall not urge the bill; if, on the other hand, he fails, I take it he will not oppose the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, I do not know about that. I will not oppose it on that ground. I will not make that the basis of opposition.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. It is a pretty grave thing for a gentleman to stop the passage or consideration of a bill upon specific charges of personal unfitness and still hold another thing in reserve.

Mr. SAYERS. I informed the gentleman yesterday fully as to what had been told me.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. The same that you told me to-day.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir. I gave the gentleman fair notice.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. We have had equal chance for investigation, and neither of us have made investigation upon that.

Mr. SAYERS. Just as soon as I told the gentleman, I walked out to my committee room and telegraphed to the Commissioner of Pensions to inform me why this man was discharged from the Pension Office. I met the Commissioner of Pensions this morning in the Interior Department and reminded him of my telegram, and asked him to send me an answer as soon as possible.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. That you have not yet received.

Mr. SAYERS. Of course not; or I would have it here.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. That is a square between us all three—the poor fellow that wants to be restored, and I, who represent the committee, and the gentleman from Texas who has resisted the passage of the bill; and if these allegations are found to be unfounded, they would remove his objections to the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. Then, Mr. Chairman, for the present I will withdraw the bill from the consideration of the committee.

The bill was withdrawn.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HALL of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6672, and that the bill had been withdrawn.

RELIEF OF MEN IN MARINE CORPS.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I call up the bill (H. R. 5371) for the relief of certain enlisted men in the Marine Corps.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That to reimburse the enlisted men of the United States Marine Corps who incurred loss of clothing by the cyclone which occurred at the naval station, Port Royal, S. C., on the night of the 27th of August, 1893, for such loss so incurred there shall be paid to each of said enlisted men the following sums, namely: To First Sergeant Michael Gallagher, $10.97; to Corporal Philip L. Heister, $10.95; to Corporal William Montoir, $18.74; to Private Joseph P. Allen, $31.39; to Private William Applestell, $5.76; to Private Charles L. Clark, $10.83; to Private John J. Cooper, $6.12; to Private Clarence S. Darden, $2.90; to Private George E. Grant, $12.80; to Private Thomas Harrison, $8.98; to Private John C. Horton, $6.08; to Private Robert McFeeters, $8.87; to Private Ulisses C. Parker, $6.89; to Private Charles Pearson, $14.18; to Private Eugene Smith, $8.82; to Private John Surman, $11.48; in all, $175.76: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury shall in all cases require a schedule and certificate from each person making a claim under this act.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that that bill was not in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that point. The whole sum amounts to only $175. These men lost their personal effects in endeavoring to save the property of the United States during the storm.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. And they did save Government property worth a great deal more than the whole amount carried by this bill.

Mr. SAYERS. All I contend is that the different committees of this House ought to be restrained within the jurisdiction prescribed for them by the rules.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This amounts altogether to only $175. These men, as I have said, lost their personal property in endeavoring to save the Government property when this cyclone occurred. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order, especially as the House referred the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SAYERS. I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will make a very brief statement of the merits of the bill. Here are sixteen warrant officers and privates in the Marine Corps, who were stationed at Port Royal at the time of the cyclone there. These men, instead of trying to save their own personal property when the cyclone broke upon the naval station, endeavored to save the property of the Government and lost their clothing and other personal effects. The amounts involved range individually from $2.50 to $30, the aggregate being $175.76. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that with this explanation there can be no objection to the passage of the bill. I therefore demand the previous question.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill S. 1399, to promote the efficiency of the naval militia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to loan temporarily to any State, upon the written application of the governor thereof, a vessel of the Navy, to be selected from such vessels as are not suitable or required for general service, together with such of her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation as he may deem proper; said vessel to be used only by the regularly organized naval militia of the State for the purposes of drill and instruction: Provided, That when the organization of the naval militia of such State shall be abandoned, or when the interests of the naval service shall so require, such vessel, together with her apparel, charts, books, and instruments of navigation, shall be immediately restored to the custody of the Secretary of the Navy: And provided further, That when such loan is made to the governor of any State, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail from the enlisted force of the Navy a sufficient number of men, not exceeding six for any vessel, as ship-keepers, the men so detailed to be additional to the number of enlisted men allowed by law for the naval establishment, and in making details for this service preference shall be given to those men who have served twenty years or more in the Navy.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, as this bill inferentially involves a small appropriation, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. I prefer, Mr. Speaker, that we should go into Committee of the Whole to consider this bill.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Under this bill if one of these vessels should need repairs while in the possession and use of the State authorities, would it not devolve upon the General Government to make the repairs?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I presume it would.

Mr. SAYERS. Another question. I understand from the reading of the bill that these enlisted seamen who are to accompany the ships when transferred to the control of the State authorities are to be in addition to the regular force of the Navy?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes. Let me explain. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Navy has already placed vessels useless for active service at the disposal of State authorities for the use of the naval militia. A monitor down in North Carolina and the old ship New Hampshire at New York have already been set aside for the use of the naval militia. Three other States have asked for ships for the use of their naval militia. The Secretary, not being entirely satisfied as to his power under the law to grant the request, sent in this bill, which has been recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously. As it appears before us now, it is a Senate bill which the House Committee on Naval Affairs has adopted as a substitute for the House bill already on the Calendar. The House bill provided that the enlisted men in the Navy placed upon the ships to care for them should be paid by the State authorities.

The Senate has sent us a bill with that provision stricken out, providing that the Secretary of the Navy shall send old sailors, not to exceed six in number in each case, to care for the ships. I am under the impression that no more than two will be needed for each vessel. I believe that the Secretary will not send more than two, but the Senate bill calls for a number not to exceed six. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has very properly observed, it is asked that these shall be in addition to the number of enlisted men now allowed to the Navy. As there are only three States calling for these ships at present, if two men were appointed in each case the total would be six, and if six men were appointed, the total would be eighteen.

I suppose that the number of enlisted men allowed to the Navy under the present law does not suffice to man the ships already in commission. By looking at the last report of the Secretary of the Navy, it will be seen that they do not suffice to man all the ships placed in commission before the beginning of the coming fiscal year. Consequently, though the number here provided for is so small, it was felt to be imperatively necessary to add a provision that these men should be added to the number of enlisted men already allowed the Navy.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no serious objection to the passage of this bill, but I desire to have its provisions so well guarded that the Government shall not be subjected to any improper or unnecessary expense. Now, let me call the attention of the gentleman to an appropriation that is made every year and which appears in the naval appropriation bill under the head of "Construction and Repairs."

Now, if I am not mistaken, the Secretary of the Navy under that appropriation may direct as much as he may deem necessary to be expended out of that item, in keeping different vessels of the Navy in repair. Now, here is a vessel which under this bill, if it should become a law, will belong temporarily to a State. What is to hinder the Secretary of the Navy, without further authorization by Congress, from expending a large portion of this general appropriation for construction and repair, in putting this old vessel in a condition to be useful to the State?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The Secretary of the Navy may either withdraw the vessel or ask the State to pay such expense.

Mr. SAYERS. When the bill was first called up I asked the gentleman whether he supposed that the expense of repairing vessels while in the possession and use of a State would be borne by the General Government; and I understood him to answer, "Yes."

Mr. CUMMINGS. If this old hulk were in ordinary, the General Government would pay the expenses of her repair. The ship is all the better for being in service. I do not suppose that the Secretary is empowered to lay out one cent beyond the appropriation of $25,000 for the naval militia for any purposes whatever in connection with the repair of such vessels. Such an expenditure, if made, would come out of that fund.

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman is quite sure it would come out of that fund?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not see how it could be taken from any other fund, without authority of Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, Mr. Chairman, according to my understanding the policy of the Navy Department a few years ago was to dispense with the use of these old vessels.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Except for training ships; and that is exactly the use intended in this case. It is proposed to make this a training vessel for the naval militia.

Mr. SAYERS. What I want to avoid is the expense of keeping these old ships in repair. They are almost valueless when they are repaired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me say to my friend from Texas that we have had to pass in the naval bill an appropriation of $8,000 to keep the old ship Constitution in repair, and I presume if any other old ship needs repairing it would be necessary for us to put an appropriation for that purpose in a future naval appropriation bill.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The gentleman from Texas will understand that we have a good many old war vessels no longer worth anything as war vessels——

Mr. SAYERS. That is the class to which I refer.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No longer worth anything as war vessels, but worth considerable to the Government for other purposes—for transportation purposes and as training vessels and as receiving ships. Thus, for various purposes, these old vessels are worth to the Government every dollar that may be necessarily expended in their repair. These old vessels, while in the possession of the Government, require seamen and officers to take care of them, and when they are put into State service those sailors and officers can be sent somewhere else where they will be of more use to the Government. So that there may be a saving to the Government in detailing these vessels—I presume I may use that term—for use by the States.

Mr. SAYERS. Then it is the gentleman's opinion that any expenditure for the repair of such vessels would come out of the $25,000 appropriated for the naval militia?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I think so. And I wish to add that the State acquires no ownership in these vessels when thus allowed to use them.

Mr. SAYERS. I understand that.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. The vessels are liable to be taken possession of by the Government whenever it may deem proper; and it is best for the vessels that they should be kept in repair. It is the duty of the Government to keep its vessels in repair.

Mr. SAYERS. My question was as to where the money would come from to repair these vessels while used by a State?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. While the vessel is temporarily in use by the State, the expense of repair would come out of the naval militia fund.

Mr. CUMMINGS. If no other gentlemen desires to ask any questions, I move that the committee rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCRAE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia, and had directed him to report the same back with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY].

Mr. MONEY. I call up the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the action of the board by which Passed Assistant Paymaster Louis A. Yorke was examined for promotion be set aside, and declared null and void; and the President is hereby authorized to appoint him to the office to which he would have been promoted but for said action, and to retire him in that grade as of the date he was wholly retired, charging him with all extra pay and allowances paid him at that time: Provided, That he shall not receive or be entitled to any pay, compensation, or allowance whatever prior to appointment under this act.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to make a very brief statement of the circumstances of this case as I understand them. Mr. Yorke entered the naval service at the age of 15, and served for twenty-four years. During that time he was never reprimanded, censured, or punished, but on the contrary there are now on file in the Department a great many letters covering that period, from the respective commanders of the ships in which he sailed, commending his excellent and officer-like conduct. He was an assistant paymaster in the Navy, and his accounts were absolutely straight in every particular.

From a very distinguished member of the Senate, who is also on the Committee on Naval Affairs, I get the information that he has personally investigated all of the accounts of this officer and found them to be absolutely correct in every detail. There was never at any time any charge of official misconduct against him. In course of time he came up with others, while afloat, for promotion to paymaster before a board composed of three paymasters according to the regulations. These three paymasters, without any charge, without any court-martial or court of inquiry, retired him wholly from the service. The records on file show that this action was taken without any court of inquiry, as I have stated, or without any charges of an official character against him, or charges of any character which would warrant such official action.

The truth was that there was a charge of a domestic character, if I may be permitted to allude to the matter in this connection. This gentleman had divorced his wife, and her family had gone before the board, as I am informed, and stated that this gentleman had borrowed money from his father-in-law to settle his accounts. This was not true in any particular, as far as his accounts were concerned. There was no necessity for borrowing money to settle them, because they were correct. He had borrowed from his father-in-law, who is a millionaire, at his own suggestion, to make investments while he was abroad in the service; but he had repaid the loans almost entirely, as I understand. At all events, the money was never needed in the settlement of his official accounts; and the whole thing was a piece of bitter resentment on the part of the relatives of his divorced wife.

That is the whole case as I learn it, and I get it all from a gentleman who has thoroughly well informed himself about it, the senior Senator from the State of Maine, who knows what he is talking about.

I may state that in the line of duty this officer has broken a leg, which is an additional reason why he ought to be restored.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. Has this bill been referred to the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose of getting his opinion about it?

Mr. MONEY. Why, the Secretary of the Navy himself reported the bill.

Mr. SAYERS. But I mean since he has been Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. MONEY. It has not been deemed necessary. It has been passed three times, however, and has been reported from the House committee over and over again. The Senate has passed it and the House committee reported back the Senate bill. There is a House bill on the Calendar which is ipsissima verba in the terms of this bill that we are now considering, and it was reported unanimously from the Committee on Naval Affairs in the last Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. The Secretary of the Navy, since he has been Secretary, has not reported upon the bill?

Mr. MONEY. He has not; but formerly when he was a member of the House committee he did report it. It has been reported favorably from the House committees and Senate committees over and over again, as I said.

Mr. SAYERS. When was this action of the board taken?

Mr. MONEY. In 1884.

Mr. SAYERS. Ten years ago.

Mr. MONEY. Yes sir. I am also informed that since then one member of the board has been dismissed.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, if he deserved it, he ought to have been.

Mr. MONEY. I do not say, however, that it was on account of this matter.

But there was no evidence, absolutely, to affect this gentleman's character. The board was not examining him on any charge or inquiry of official misconduct, but simply for promotion, with a number of others. Those were ex parte facts that came before the board in an entirely unofficial way, and they had no right to take the action they did. This bill simply proposes to right a wrong. It is an act of justice to remove a stigma on the character of a most deserving officer.

Mr. SAYERS. The effect of the action of the examining board was to dismiss him from the service?

Mr. MONEY. They wholly retired him from the service.

Mr. SAYERS. Without pay?

Mr. MONEY. Yes. This calls, however, for no back pay, let me state.

Mr. SAYERS. He is on the retired list without pay?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; he is absolutely out of the service. This is simply to restore him to the place for which he was examined, and to which he would have been admitted but for the action taken upon facts that ought never to have been considered by the board.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I wish to call my colleague's attention to the fact that it was not a unanimous report in the last Congress; I voted against it myself in the committee.

Mr. SAYERS. I think the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to give us some light on this matter, if he can. We are all in the dark.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman from Texas will please excuse me, you have light upon it now.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The "gentleman from New York" bows to the action of his committee in this regard. This matter is in full charge of Mr. MONEY.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. Was not this case resubmitted for review finally, and determined upon in accordance with the first findings?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. LOUD. I think it would be well to have the report read.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection to having the report read.

Mr. LOUD. I have been informed by a party who investigated the case that it was re-reviewed, and that the first decision was sustained.

Mr. MONEY. It has not been sustained, according to my information.

Mr. LOUD. I was so informed by a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom it was submitted, and he said he could never report favorably upon it.

Mr. MONEY. It was unanimously reported and favorably considered. I ask the Clerk to read the report.

The report (by Mr. GEISSENHAINER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, having examined the same, find that the Senate report (No. 429) made thereon fully sets out the facts, as the committee have ascertained upon their own investigation. They therefore adopt the said report and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 429, Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2286) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report it back with an amendment and recommend its passage as amended.

Louis A. Yorke entered the Navy when he was 15½ years old, such entry being in February, 1862. He was commissioned an assistant paymaster in October, 1869, and promoted to be a passed assistant paymaster in 1875. He was ordered before an examining board for promotion to be a paymaster on the 4th of December, 1886, said board consisting of three paymasters, and by this board he was wholly retired from the naval service.

The records of the Navy Department, and also the records of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, show that while Mr. Yorke was in the naval service his accounts were always promptly and correctly rendered, and the files of the Navy Department contain letters from his commanding officers extending over a period of twenty years, showing his conduct and record to have been of the highest character. During all the years of his service he was never placed under arrest, suspended, reprimanded, or punished in any way whatsoever, and your committee believes, from its careful investigation into the facts concerning this case, that the action taken by the examination board was arrived at without sufficient evidence, and, therefore, your committee thinks that this bill should pass, and thus in a measure repair the injury done Mr. Yorke.

It should also be stated that Mr. Yorke suffers from a broken leg, which injury he received directly in the line of duty, and as he seeks only to be placed upon the retired list of the Navy, with the rank which he attained after twenty odd years of faithful and meritorious service, your committee is of the unanimous opinion that his prayer should be granted and the bill enacted.

Mr. LOUD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] well knows that this board of officers had no power to retire this person, who was up for examination. They had the power to recommend; but I should like to ask the gentleman if that recommendation was not reviewed and affirmed by the Secretary of the Navy, and is it not a fact that the case came again on review before the Secretary of the Navy and he reaffirmed that first decision?

Mr. MONEY. I can not answer that question, because I do not know.

Mr. LOUD. There may be merit in this case, but it does not appear before the House. It seems to me there should be some information from the Department.

Mr. MONEY. I do not know as to the facts that the gentleman alludes to. The gentleman has asked me about matters that I do not know anything about; but I will say to him that the committees of the two Houses have repeatedly gone all over the circumstances of this case, have thoroughly investigated every paper in the Department—and there are a great many there—and they have favorably reported repeatedly. Three times it has passed the Senate, and, as I have said, the senior Senator from Maine told me that he had personally gone over every paper, and that there was not anything to justify the action of that board.

Mr. LOUD. But you are reëxamining the report of the Secretary of the Navy, are you not, and you do not present any papers to the House from the Department to sustain the position you take?

Mr. MONEY. I am supporting the action of the committee. If it is not satisfactory to the gentleman, of course I am very sorry for it.

Mr. SAYERS. I should like to ask the gentleman another question: whether or not the first report made by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate was not adverse?

Mr. MONEY. I do not know. I never heard of an adverse report. I know that it has three times passed the Senate without any opposition, and of course it was done upon a favorable report. That is the whole case as far as I am acquainted with it.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care to stand in the way of the passage of this bill, although on the facts, as I understand them, I have serious doubts about it. I do not wish to be captious about it.

Mr. MONEY. As the gentleman from California withdraws his objection, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House favorably.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BYNUM having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MONEY. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FREE PUBLIC SCHOOLS ON THE NAVAL RESERVATION, PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 103.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I call up House bill 103.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school for children under 17 years of age at the village of Warrington, on the Naval Reservation on Pensacola Bay in the State of Florida.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, that bill ought to go to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a bill which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school, for children under 17 years of age, at the village of Warrington, on the naval reservation on Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school for children under 17 years of age of parents residing on the naval reservation, in the villages of Warrington and Woolsey, on Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida. That the said school shall be established and maintained in the said village of Warrington at an annual expense of not exceeding $5,000, which said sum is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I yield so much time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, the object of this bill is to provide two schools, one for the whites and the other for the blacks, who reside on what is known as the naval reservation on Pensacola Bay. These people are differently situated, perhaps, from any other in the United States, unless they can be assimilated to the people of the District of Columbia. The naval reservation is entirely within the jurisdiction of the United States. It is not like most of our navy-yard reservations, included within the walls of the yard, but outside of the walls is a considerable territory.

The reservation is about 3 miles long with an average width of a mile and a half, and outside of the navy-yard proper have grown up two villages, one known as Warrington, named after a commodore of the Navy, and the other named Wolsey. These villages were built up a good many years ago by people who went down from the Northern States to take part in building some ships built there just prior to the war. The sloop of war Pensacola was built there in 1858, and the gunboat Seminole was also built there at that time. A large number of these people were skilled mechanics, who came from New York and Baltimore, and were engaged in the construction of these vessels. They carried their families with them, and when the war came on they had to remain there, and——

The CHAIRMAN. The morning hour has expired, and the committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BYNUM having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 103, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for the present.

Mr. BLAND. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has sent over to the House the Indian appropriation bill with a partial concurrence. I ask that the report of the committee of conference and the statement of the House conferees be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of July 13, 1894, calling for information as to the cause of delay in adjusting accounts due deputy surveyors for contract work performed under direction of surveyor-generals, etc., a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, giving the desired information; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7071) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of the District of Columbia from taxation.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of petty officers and enlisted men of the United States Navy, praying that marines may be withdrawn from ships of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin presented sundry memorials of citizens of Milwaukee, Stoughton, Black Earth, and Waupaca, all in the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of California, remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Pollock, La., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Platte, Nebr., praying for the entire separation of church and state, and remonstrating against Government appropriations for sectarian Indian schools; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the early settlement of the tariff question; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present the petition of Morrison I. Swift and sundry other citizens of Boston, Mass., praying that the members of the Senate and House of Representatives resign immediately. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say a few words on the reference of the petition which my colleague has just presented. I have received a similar petition, which of course it is unnecessary to present, my colleague having presented the petition; but I wish to point out for the consideration of this gentleman and the persons who have joined with him in this class of petitions, that they seem to be absolutely unconscious of the existence of a body of men called the American people. They send in their petitions and make their demands upon us as if a dozen or a hundred or a thousand men had only to get together on a commons somewhere, and after five or ten minutes of turbulent conversation propose something, and that is to take the place of the Constitution and laws of this country at once.

Now, the people of the country have considered the question of the resignation of the public officers, and have demanded that resignation in a very much more peremptory manner than these gentlemen can possibly do it. They have not only demanded it, but they have fixed the time for it after great consideration, and we are all of us about to resign our offices at the time which the American people have determined. You, Mr. President, are going to resign the honorable office which you hold on the 4th day of March, 1897, and you will do it without any further prompting or goading or request.

You may be promoted to one more honorable, or at any rate one with more power; you may be continued in another term in your present office; you may be called to some other form of public service, or you may retire to private life; but like all of us you are to resign, and the people have determined the time and the occasion and the manner of doing it. The demand of these worthy gentlemen seems to have been made without having read or understood that the arrangements on the subject have already been made with the assent of almost the entire body of the American people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. LODGE presented the memorial of Charles G. Hanwood and 122 other citizens of Lynn, Mass., remonstrating against the support of the Government in maintaining the present system of sectarian Indian education, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KYLE presented the petition of John H. Randall, general commander of the Chicago branch of the commonweal army; M. C. Servis, J. C. Howard, and 150 other members of the army, representing all trades, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1814 to provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH. I present a petition of the Commercial Club of Savannah, Ga., praying for the early settlement of the tariff question. I ask that the petition lie on the table, and be printed in the RECORD.

The petition was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., July 20, 1894.

The Commercial Club of Savannah, at a meeting duly held and regularly called for that purpose, distinctly and emphatically records its earnest protest against the dilatory action which now marks the progress of the tariff bill pending before the Congress of the United States. This club embraces within its membership men who represent the leading commercial and industrial pursuits of this community. Its interests are not circumscribed within the limits of this city, nor within the great State of Georgia, but the objective purpose of its formation was to advance alike the material prosperity of the entire nation. It believes that it voices the sentiment of the people of the United States when it says that the uncertainty attendant upon the adjustment of that measure has caused untold financial embarrassment, restricted the use of capital, limited investment, and has had a general and most depressing effect upon all lines of material activity.

The delicate and complicated machinery of business at this time is not unlike the condition of a sick patient who has long been deprived of the sustaining forces of life; and the great financial convulsion which has recently swept over this country has left its business interests in such a condition that the immediate application of restorative remedies is imperatively required.

Any concession which would tend to effectuate the immediate passage of this bill would be infinitely preferable to delay at this crisis. It is therefore

Resolved by the Commercial Club of Savannah, That immediate action upon the tariff bill is necessary to end the existing financial depression and embarrassment, and to stimulate trade to its normal condition. It is Further resolved, That the Representatives and Senators of the State of Georgia in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use every effort to bring about some speedy and definite action upon this bill. It is Further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Representatives and Senators from the State of Georgia.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 397) for the relief of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, of the United States Navy, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PEFFER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 224) for the relief of William P. Buckmaster, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PATTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 817) for the relief of Jennie M. Hunt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1527) for the relief of the officers and crews of the United States gunboats Kineo and Chocura, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1571) for the relief of Thomas Williams, an employé of the Senate folding room, for injuries received while in the discharge of his duties in the year 1892, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I was not aware of the arrangement yesterday by which the bankruptcy bill was to be reported by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] from the Committee on the Judiciary. Had I known the report was to be made I should have stated at least that as a member of the committee I dissented from that bill. I am not in favor of the bill as it stands. I am in favor of a bankruptcy bill covering both voluntary and involuntary cases, and if no other Senator shall offer the amendment when the bill comes up for consideration, I shall submit what is known as the Torrey bankruptcy bill, with some modifications, as a substitute for the bill reported by the Senator from Mississippi from the committee. The change that I propose to make is simply to strike out one of the causes of bankruptcy specified in the bill as reported. The bill proposes to make mere commercial failure at a certain time an act of bankruptcy. To that I am opposed, and I shall move to strike it out, and then, unless some other Senator submits it, I shall offer as a substitute for the pending bill, which covers merely voluntary cases of bankruptcy, the Torrey bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent that the bankruptcy bill, reported yesterday from the Judiciary Committee with amendments, be printed in document form for the use of the Senate. I ask that there be 5,000 copies of the bill printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

OMAHA INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6814) extending the time of payment to purchasers of lands of the Omaha tribe of Indians in Nebraska, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment. I ask that the bill may be now considered. It is a House bill, and there is necessity for immediate action.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that a ratification of an agreement made with those Indians? I see that the bill says something about an agreement being ratified.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes; it is subject to the ratification or consent of the Omaha Indians. It is simply an extension of time for the payment of the balance of the purchase money. The bill is approved by the Indian Office, and is in every respect all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TARIFF BULLETIN.

Mr. HARRIS. On behalf of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is detained from the Senate by illness, I report from the Committee on Finance Tariff Bulletin No. 32½, relating to the rates on sugar in various stages of the tariff bill, with the amendments relating to the same which were offered during the debate in the Senate and House of Representatives. I ask that the bulletin be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2271) to amend an act of Congress approved March 3, 1835, entitled "An act granting to the borough of Michilimackinac certain grounds for public purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALSH introduced a bill (S. 2272) to increase the pension of James Longstreet; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BATE, it was Ordered, That William Markwood be authorized to withdraw from the files of the Senate, under the rules of the Senate, the papers relating to the bill in the Fifty-second Congress to grant him an honorable discharge.

REPORT ON SLUMS OF CITIES.

Mr. KYLE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth, for the use of the Commissioner of Labor, 6,000 additional copies of his seventh special report, relating to the slums of cities.

DOMINION COAL COMPANY, OF NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. CHANDLER. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and go over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie over, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the charges of bribery against Senators be instructed to inquire into the facts connected with the organization and history of the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such company was formed or is being conducted by reason of any assurances that the tariff duty on coal shall be repealed by Congress; and if so, to ascertain who gave such assurances; and whether or not any officer of the Government or any member of Congress is or was interested in said company; and what action, if any, has been taken by any person in fulfillment of said assurances.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE HIWASSEE, TENNESSEE, AND CLINCH RIVERS.

Mr. BATE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4611) to amend an act approved January 26, 1893, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee. I desire to state that it is important that the bill shall be passed promptly, and I do not think it will consume any time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to extend for one year the time within which the actual construction of the bridges may be commenced.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. SUSIE CONWAY.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of House bill 6902.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not take much longer to finish the sundry civil appropriation bill to-day, and then there will be ample time for the consideration of other bills. I shall not, however, object to the bill called up by the Senator from Kentucky, but as soon as that is concluded I shall move to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6902) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Susie Conway.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Susie Conway, widow of Senior Lieut. W. P. Conway, late of the United States Navy, and to pay her a pension of $35 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now allowed.

The bill was reported to; the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] offers his amendment, I desire to offer an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations, to come in on page 56, line 14, after the word "same." Before submitting the amendment, I will ask the Secretary to read the communication which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., July 30, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, approved February 15, 1893, provides no appropriation from which expenses incurred thereunder may be paid, and that under a recent ruling of the First Comptroller of the Treasury no expenses incurred in the execution of such act can be paid from the appropriation for preventing the spread of epidemic diseases, except only in the case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, or smallpox. I would, therefore, respectfully request that an appropriation of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet such expenses during the current fiscal year, may be incorporated in the sundry civil or deficiency appropriation bills now pending in the Senate.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I ask that the amendment I have proposed from the committee may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 14, after the word "same," it is proposed to insert:

And not exceeding $35,000 of said sum for necessary expenses in the execution of the act of February 15, 1893, granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have one other amendment. In line 22, on the same page, in the appropriations for public buildings, by an oversight certain words were left out of the amendment which reads:

For a new copper roof for the Pension Office building $28,560.

After the word "building," in line 22, I move to insert "and a corrugated metal ceiling for the great hall." That is a part and parcel of the amendment already adopted, which was reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 2, after line 14.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

That, in order to give the necessary full and free ingress and egress to the wagons carrying the United States mails into and out from the Philadelphia post-office, the Secretary of the Treasury, acting for and in behalf of the Government of the United States, is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, certain lots or pieces of ground in the city of Philadelphia, State of Pennsylvania, adjoining or adjacent to the Philadelphia post-office building on the west, and more particularly described as follows, to wit:

All that certain lot or piece of ground late of John J. Ridgeway, deceased, situate on the south side of Market street, in the Ninth ward of the said city of Philadelphia, beginning at a point on the line of said Market street where the same intersects the west side of Post-Office street, containing in front on Market street 16 feet 8 inches, and extending in length or depth of that width southwardly between parallel lines at right angles with said Market street 231½ feet, to the north side of Chant street.

Also, all those three certain lots or pieces of ground, late of James Magee, deceased, situate on the north side of said Chant street, beginning at a point in the northern line of said Chant street 16 feet 8 inches westward from the west side of Post-Office street, containing in front on said Chant street 47 feet 2¾ inches, more or less, and extending in length or depth northwardly between parallel lines at right angles with said Chant street 56 feet, more or less, to land now or late of Caroline A. Magee.

Also, all that certain lot or piece of ground now or late of Caroline A. Magee immediately adjoining the said last described lot of ground on the north, beginning at a point on the westward line of the said first above described lot or piece of ground at the distance of 56 feet northward from the north side of Chant street, extending thence northward along the westerly side of said first above described lot of ground 15 feet 6 inches; thence westwardly 47 feet 2¾ inches to a point at the head of a certain alley; thence southward partly along the head of said alley and partly along the line of a certain lot or piece of ground, the property of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, 15 feet 6 inches to a point; thence eastwardly 47 feet 2¾ inches, along the northward line of said second above described piece of ground, to the place of beginning.

Also, that rectangular-shaped lot or piece of ground belonging to St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, adjoining the properties above described, containing in front on Chant street 27 feet and 1 inch, and northerly on Boyer Place 70 feet; and a sum sufficient for the purpose, not to exceed $175,000, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, the proposition which has just been read has been twice reported favorably from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Once it was inserted by that committee in a sundry civil appropriation bill, and passed the Senate.

The acquisition of the property described in the amendment is absolutely necessary for the proper distribution of the mails at Philadelphia. It is desirable that it shall be bought, and bought promptly, for the reason that the wagons used in distribution of the mails have not the necessary facilities of access to the post-office, so that they may be loaded and unloaded from the rear of the building. For want of these facilities the daily postal business is seriously embarrassed.

In support of the proposition I will merely lay before the Senate the resolution of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, a letter from the postmaster of Philadelphia, stating the reasons why the appropriation is necessary, and, connected therewith, the report of the chief inspector of the Post-Office Department, stating that the purchase of the property referred to is necessary, and recommending that the appropriation be made. I send the papers to the desk and ask that they may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The papers referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, January 2, 1894.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

At a quarterly meeting of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, held December 18, 1893, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the Philadelphia Board of Trade, in a communication addressed to the Hon. John Wanamaker, Postmaster-General, under date of November 22, 1890, fully set forth the great and serious inconvenience and delay occasioned by the lack of necessary room for the movement of mail wagons in the rear of the Philadelphia post-office, and by the narrowness of the approaches to the post-office used by said wagons and vehicles in the delivery of mail matter; and,

Whereas the recommendation then made, that the Government should remedy the evil by the acquisition, through condemnation and purchase, of certain properties in the rear of the post-office, from which the buildings should be removed and the room secured thereby be utilized in facilitating the movement of all wagons engaged in the transportation of the mails, has not yet been adopted by reason of the failure of Congress to make the necessary appropriation for same; and

Whereas the Philadelphia postmaster has again called public attention to the necessity of securing more room and readier access for mail wagons and for the accommodation of the public mailing the lower grades of postal matter: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Philadelphia Board of Trade earnestly petitions the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States to appropriate an amount sufficient for the acquisition by purchase or condemnation of such properties in the rear of the Philadelphia post-office as may be needed to furnish the necessary facilities for the prompt and expeditious handling of the incoming and outgoing mails.

A true copy.

[SEAL.]

F. FRALEY,
President Philadelphia Board of Trade.

Attest:

W. R. TUCKER,
Secretary.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF CHIEF POST-OFFICE INSPECTOR,
Washington, December 13, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to submit my report in case No. 173,307 C, "relative to additional space for the Philadelphia post-office." I have made several visits to Philadelphia in this very important case, and given the questions involved a careful and detailed study and investigation, availing myself of the expert experience of late Postmaster Harrity, Postmaster Carr, ex-Postmaster-General Wanamaker, Hon. W. M. Singerly, Hon. G. W. Childs, Inspector-in-Charge Edgarton, Superintendent of Mails Alexander, and prominent business men generally, who are the most concerned in a prompt and expeditious mail service.

It is a most remarkable fact that ample space has been provided in the inside of the Philadelphia post-office for a rapid and convenient handling of the mail, and that the means of getting the mail in and out of the office are so cramped and inconvenient as to be a positive delay and obstruction of the mail service.

This was a fact when this post-office was first occupied; and from year to year, as the bulk of mail has increased and the transportation wagons multiplied, it has come to a point where an imperative demand is made for additional space for the reception and delivery of the mail. The alleyway at the back of this great post-office where all mail is received and delivered by wagons, and where the 700 employés are obliged to gain entrance and egress, is only 10 feet at the entrance for wagons on Market street, and that space is continued for 125 feet with a sidewalk for employés 3 feet wide. Continuing further south the alley way widens to 18 feet for 99 feet to Chant street. Chant street runs west to Tenth street, and the roadway is 25 feet wide, and on either side is a 10-feet wide sidewalk. In order to give the enlarged facilities which this post-office must have for a proper and expeditious service, the Government should acquire the lot fronting on the south side of Market street adjoining the alley entrance hitherto described.

This property is known as No. 918 Market street, being 17½ feet front on Market street and extending southward in rear of post-office to Chant street, a distance of 223 feet. It is also most desirable to obtain the lot beginning at a point adjoining a church property on Chant street, a distance of 137 feet east from Tenth street, and extending northwardly a distance of 71½ feet, and thence eastwardly a distance of 46 feet, thence southwardly a distance of 71½ feet, and thence westwardly 64 feet to the place of beginning. Between this lot and the rear end of the lot first described there is a small alleyway 10 feet wide, extending north from Chant street to the rear end of the building on Market street. This property herein described, is illustrated by the blue print forwarded with this report marked Exhibit "A," the lined part being the property described.

In the investigation of this case, I have watched for hours in the busy part of the day and night the crush of mail wagons at the rear of this post-office. I find that there are 330 separate dispatches of mail by wagons each day to railway stations and subpost-offices; 314 separate mails by wagons are received from railway post-offices and substations; also an average of 175 wagons loaded with second-class matter from publishers and newsdealers. Besides, all the coal for the use of the Government building is received in this small alley, amounting to over 4,000 tons yearly.

Thirty-six mail wagons are in service for the transfer of the mails. The two-horse wagons are 23 feet long, including the whole outfit. The small wagons, with horses, are 18 feet long; consequently the alleyway herein described is just wide enough for one of the small wagons to stand across in receiving and dispatching the mail when it is backed up against the post-office building. The two-horse wagons are too long to permit them to back square against the post-office building; consequently, while waiting for space to approach the post-office building the mail wagons are obliged to halt on Market street, the principal business street of the city, thus blocking up this great thoroughfare and impeding travel and business. This blockade would not be tolerated were those wagons not employed in the Government service. The mail wagons also block Chant street, which is the rear entrance to some of the largest and most important mercantile houses, publishing houses, and newspaper offices on Market and Chestnut streets. In fact, the mail wagons run over the scales and impede the business of the Philadelphia Record, with its immense traffic in coal, paper, as well as its delivery of newspapers.

The property described can be purchased now at a reasonable price, but in the future, when it may be improved and the price advanced, it will be more difficult and expensive to acquire.

It does not admit of doubt or discussion that the public service most urgently needs and demands this additional space for the Philadelphia post-office, and upon the testimony of the prominent gentlemen heretofore referred to, who, without exception, strongly favored the purchase of the additional property by the Government, as well as upon my own personal investigation of the situation, I feel it my duty to most earnestly recommend that the property be acquired at the earliest practicable date.

Very respectfully,

M. D. WHEELER, Chief Inspector.

Hon. R. A. MAXWELL,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

POST-OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA, PA., OFFICE OF POSTMASTER,
Philadelphia, March 20, 1894.

SIR; I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 6th instant (W. B. F.) inclosing a copy of a bill introduced by Mr. QUAY upon February 6 last for the purchase of additional lots of ground adjoining or adjacent to the post-office building in this city, and requesting information as to the necessity for the purchase, the dimensions of the properties, and the appraised and market values.

I inclose you herewith six copies of a printed statement of facts which I had prepared on the subject, and which will give you the information you request as to the necessity for the proposed purchase. I also inclose a blue print which shows the exact location and upon which the property proposed to be purchased is marked with diagonal white lines. I also inclose a statement of the assessed values of the different properties, and I am informed by a person who has had a very wide experience in real estate in this city that the market values of the properties referred to are as follows: No. 913 Market street, marked A upon the inclosed statement, $75,000; Nos. 919 and 921 Chant street, and Nos. 10 and 11 St. Stephens place, marked B upon the inclosed statement, $25,000; total, $100,000. You will observe that this does not include the amount which would be necessary to take down and remove the present structures.

If I may be of further assistance to you in this matter, I beg you will command me.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. WILKINS CARR, Postmaster.

Mr. W. E. CURTIS,
Acting Secretary, Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to say that this amendment has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Appropriations did not insert this amendment in the bill because we did not think it was best for us to undertake to insert in an appropriation bill every bill that might be recommended by some other committee. We were flooded with reports from other committees recommending what we conceived to be legislation to be inserted in the bill, and we avoided putting them in just as much as it was possible to do, and accepted only those which seemed to be absolutely necessary.

Mr. QUAY. Does not the Senator from Missouri consider the amendment I have proposed as absolutely necessary, in view of the statements of the officials of the Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. If I were a private individual and had a surplus of money and was running that post-office, I would want this ground and would buy it; but if I did not have any money with which to buy it, I do not know that I would contract for it on credit.

Mr. QUAY. I trust the Senator will accept the amendment and let it go into conference, and when we ascertain what is to become of the tariff and what we are going to have in the way of revenue, we shall know whether we are to have the money or not. I make that suggestion to the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. I raise no question of order on the Senator's amendment. The Senate can vote upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, to be inserted after line 5, on page 52.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 5, insert:

In every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of the appropriate immigration or customs officers, if adverse to the admission of such alien, shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any recommendation from the Department about the amendment?

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment is offered after conference with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, who is now on the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. By direction of the Committee on Immigration I now move an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 18, insert:

The commissioners of immigration at the several ports shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to hold their offices for the term of four years, unless sooner removed, and until their successors are appointed; and nominations for such offices shall be made to the Senate by the President as soon as practicable after the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POWER. I move to insert after the word "dollars," in line 17, on page 85:

And of Fort Harrison, Mont., to $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert after line 20, on page 69:

For the purpose of making a resurvey of the lands of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $16,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the reason for the amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. The reason for it is the passage of a law within the last few days authorizing a resurvey of those counties.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is an appropriation for that work?

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment provides an appropriation. The bill which was passed did not carry an appropriation, and this is an appropriation to carry out the terms of the bill. I suppose it is satisfactory to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. After line 2, on page 83, I move to insert:

For the purchase, by the Joint Committee on the Library, of the oil portrait, by E. F. Andrews, of Mrs. Dolly Madison, wife of the fourth President of the United States, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and said painting when purchased shall be placed in the Executive Mansion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to follow line 15, on page 72.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 72, insert:

That all soldiers' additional homestead certificates heretofore issued under the rules and regulations of the General Land Office under section 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or in pursuance of the decisions or instructions of the Secretary of the Interior, of date March 10, 1877, or any subsequent decisions or instructions of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, shall be, and are hereby, declared to be valid, notwithstanding any attempted sale or transfer thereof; and where such certificates have been or may hereafter be sold or transferred, such sale or transfer shall not be regarded as invalidating the right, but the same shall be good and valid in the hands of bona fide purchasers for value; and all entries heretofore or hereafter made with such certificates by such purchasers shall be approved, and patent shall issue in the name of the assignees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I offer an amendment, to follow line 8, on page 84.

The SECRETARY. After line 8, page 84, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General are hereby instructed to report to Congress what action has been taken by them or their predecessors in office under the act of July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington," and under previous acts, and to report the present condition of the titles to the water rights and to such land contiguous thereto as may be necessary for the improvement of the water power at Great Falls to a sufficient extent to furnish an adequate supply of water for the District of Columbia and to furnish power for lighting the public buildings and grounds by electricity, and to report, further, the amount and present condition of claims now pending against the United States growing out of its taking or use of the water at Great Falls. And the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for carrying out the provisions of this act and for making the plans for the plant necessary for said purpose, with estimates of the cost and also of the cost of operating and maintaining the plant for electric lighting and a comparison with the present cost of lighting.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to add at the end of the amendment:

Said Secretary of War is also hereby authorized to negotiate with the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and the other owners of land and water rights at the Great Falls with a view of settling existing claims on the part of said owners against the United States and of acquiring the title to said land and the whole of said water rights, and to report the result of his views at the next session of Congress.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment submitted by me I think obviates the objections that were made to the amendment submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. It has been read to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and is acceptable to him, and I think is also acceptable to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

It provides for gaining the necessary information to act intelligently upon this subject, which is of great importance. The appropriation of $10,000 is exactly what was recommended by the board of engineers appointed recently by the War Department for the purpose named in the amendment. That report is not yet printed, but I have had an advance copy of it. They recommend an appropriation of $10,000 to make the necessary plans and estimates before an intelligent judgment can be formed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment does not commit the Government to anything.

Mr. CHANDLER. Neither amendment commits the Government to anything.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is simply proposed to direct the Secretary of War to investigate and report.

Mr. CHANDLER. And appropriates some money to submit plans. The Government is not committed to anything whatever, and the rights of all parties are preserved pending the inquiry.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1471) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of the American Transportation Company for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, in the State of Ohio.

TOWN SITES IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of presenting a conference report, a privileged question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Arkansas to submit the report.

Mr. BERRY. I submit a conference report, which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3806) to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

They have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BERRY,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. B. KILGORE,
Manager on the part of the House.

Mr. BERRY. The Senate will remember, Mr. President, that several months ago a House bill came to the Senate which required railroad trains to stop at Government town sites in Oklahoma. The bill was discussed at length, and an amendment was put upon the bill by the Senate requiring an election to be held within thirty days thereafter to determine the location of county seats. The House of Representatives refused to agree to the Senate amendment, a conference committee was appointed, and the conferees have had various meetings. There is no longer any probability of an agreement, and we have disagreed. I desire now to enter a motion that the Senate recede from the amendment, which will pass the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

I do not propose to go over the discussion of this matter again. I will state, however, that the failure of the Senate to agree to the bill as it came from the House has caused infinite trouble in Oklahoma Territory. The Rock Island Railroad Company has still refused to furnish the depots to the two towns of South Enid and Pond Creek.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to make a statement. This motion will be opposed, and I wish to finish my remarks.

The committee are not agreed on this subject. I make the motion that the Senate recede from the amendment requiring an election to be held.

These towns under their corporate laws passed ordinances regulating the speed of the railroad trains through the respective towns, which they had an undoubted right to do under the Territorial laws of Oklahoma. The railroad disregarded the law and disobeyed it. The company treated it with contempt and scorn. The result was that the excitement continued until certain lawless parties—not the entire citizens, because the great body of the citizens are as law-abiding and as peaceful as any citizens in the country—became so exasperated at the conduct of the railroad, the citizens having offered to pay all the expense of the erection of the depots and the road continuing to refuse, disregarding the ordinance and overriding the law, that they destroyed a large amount of railroad property—burned it.

I do not think any lives were lost, but there was great tumult and great commotion, and there is to-day. A large number of citizens were arrested. United States troops have been there, and there has been great feeling and great excitement, all of which would have been avoided but for the Senate amendment, the adoption of which the railroad forced, requiring an election within the Territory. It had no place on the bill. It is not a matter as to which the railroad had a right to dictate. In my opinion it never should have been adopted here as an amendment, although a majority of the Senate disagreed with me.

I believe now that the proper thing, in order to give peace to that community and that there may be peace and order throughout the Territory, is for the Senate to recede from the election amendment and pass the House bill, and thereby force the Rock Island Railroad to give those persons depot facilities for freight and passenger trains.

As I have before stated, the citizens are willing to pay every dollar of the cost and will promise and agree to do it. They have again and again offered to do so and are now ready to do it, but the railroad has refused all accomodations and all compromise, and absolutely refuses to stop the trains. I therefore hope that a majority of the Senate will recede from the position of the amendment and compel the railroad to give those people the depot facilities that they require, and thereby restore peace and order to that community.

I ask to have read as a part of my remarks a letter written by the acting governor of the Territory to the president of the Rock Island Railroad.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Guthrie, July 16, 1894.

SIR: A state of facts exists in this Territory which is calamitous to the best interests of Oklahoma and to your railway company. To accurately locate the responsibility for this state of affairs is not the purpose of this letter, but I desire to call your attention to the conditions which do exist and for which conditions you have the remedy within your power to relieve.

When the Cherokee Strip was opened to settlement, your company was operating a line of railway from Caldwell, south, through said Strip. It had located along its line a few stations which were primarily built for the convenience of the railway company, and such stations were not intended or expected to be of a permanent character, or to control the building of cities and towns along the line of your road in the Cherokee Strip.

Prior to the opening of the Strip the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the act of Congress opening such land to settlement, laid out two county-seat towns on your line of railway, known as Round Pond and Enid. Your company, or the managers who control the operation of your road in this Territory, refused to give to such county-seat towns depot facilities. You know the result of the attempt of these people to procure legislation from Congress to aid them in securing proper depot facilities for their towns. Of late many acts of violence have been perpetrated by irresponsible people connected with the towns of Round Pond and Enid, causing great destruction of your property, impeding United States mails and interstate commerce, and endangering life, and as acting governor of this Territory I am called upon daily for protection to your property.

This condition of affairs is lamentable in the extreme, and I wish to say to you, as president of the Rock Island Railway Company, that I believe your company to be in a great measure responsible for the destruction of property and for the lawless condition which exists, and take this occasion to say to you that I think your company has gone as far as it ought to go in withholding from the people of those county-seat towns what, I do not hesitate to say, they are clearly entitled to upon equity and fair dealing between a corporation and citizens of a town.

I wish to call your attention to the further fact that the mayors and common council at both Round Point and Enid have passed ordinances regulating the speed of railway trains through their corporate limits. That came strictly within the statute. That, I am informed, your company unhesitatingly violates those ordinances; have made no pretense whatever of obeying them, and publicly defy the lawful authorities of those cities.

As acting governor of this Territory I now respectfully call upon you to see to it that your company, by its agents, cease violating the ordinances of the cities of Round Pond and Enid, through which your trains run, and thereby set an example to the people who are disposed to injure your property of obedience to law. And I will take this occasion further to call your attention to the fact that it is commonly reported, and I believe the same to be true, that your company, for the purpose of subserving the private interests of a few of the parties who are managing and operating the line which runs through Oklahoma, have undertaken to injure, and if possible obliterate from existence the county-seat towns of Round Pond and Enid for the sole and only purpose of enriching themselves by the sale of town lots in rival towns.

I do not know whether you are a party to this scheme or not. I have always been of the opinion that the Rock Island Railway Company was a corporation primarily created for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit of the private interests of a few of its managers. Its stockholders can obtain no advantage whatever by pursuing the course which it has been pursuing in this Territory. Its best interests are unquestionably lost sight of in the further carrying out of the policy so far inaugurated and carried on.

While as acting governor of this Territory I shall do everything in my power to uphold law and order, yet I deem it my duty to say to you, as president of the Rock Island Railway Company that the action of such company toward the county-seat towns referred to, is an act of gross injustice which the company itself ought to correct and which the people of this Territory will correct as soon as the Legislature convenes, unless you, of your own motion, shall do away with the evil.

The people both at Round Pond and Enid have repeatedly offered to bear all the expenses which your company will be to in putting in depot facilities and side trackage in their cities. Those towns were laid out by the Government and the good faith of the Government pledged to those people who would settle within the limits of such towns. In most instances they went there with their all. They have built their homes and established their business with the view of spending their days in the town where they have settled. Round Pond is a place of from twelve to fifteen hundred inhabitants; Enid is a place of from two to three thousand inhabitants. Both of them are established county-seat towns; both of them have post-offices and a large trade centers at both places, and why the officers of your company should permit a few of its selfish managers to attempt to destroy such cities is beyond my comprehension and must unquestionably work disastrously to the interests of your company.

I appeal to you as president of a great corporation to do these people justice, and I demand at the hands of your company an observance of the laws of the cities through which your company run its trains.

I address this to you personally in the belief that you have not heretofore had this matter before you in such a way that you understood the gross injustice which your company was perpetrating upon these people, and in the hope that you will at once take steps to correct such injustice.

I hope to hear from you at once upon this matter.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

THOMAS J. LOWE,
Acting Governor of Oklahoma.

R. R. CABLE,
President of the Chicago and Rock Island Railway Company, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask for the reading of the conference report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3606) to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

They have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BERRY,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. B. KILGORE,
Manager on the part of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the point of order that that is not a conference report. It is signed by but one of the conferees on the part of the other House, and by only two of the conferees of the Senate. It is not signed by a majority of the joint conference.

Mr. BERRY rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. BERRY. I was not aware of the fact stated by the Senator from Kentucky until the clerks told me after the report was sent to the desk. I sent it to the House conferees, and I thought two of them had signed it. If the Senator from Kentucky makes any point about it, I have sent for Mr. AVERY and I will ask to withdraw the report until I can see him.

I wish to give notice now that as soon as I get the signature, at any hour, at any time or at any moment, when I can get the floor I shall present the report. I thought the report had been properly signed until the clerks called my attention to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, of course, is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. BERRY subsequently said: I now send to the desk the conference report on House bill 3606, and renew my motion that the Senate recede from its amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3606) to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

They have been unable to agree.

JAMES H. BERRY,
JO. C. S. BLACKBURN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
C. B. KILGORE,
JNO. AVERY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the Senate is tired of this bill. I am sure that I am. We have had it under consideration since the early days of December last; in fact, I think, earlier than that. The title of the bill shows the purpose of it. It reads:

An act to require railroad companies operating railroads in the Territories over a right of way granted by the Government—

Not to stop trains, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, but—to establish stations and depots at all town sites on the lines of said roads established by the Interior Department.

The history of the disagreement between the two Houses must be too well remembered by the Senate to necessitate my going over it again. There is no longer any question in the bill that involves a railroad company. Everything that the Interior Department asks for as against the railroad company has been agreed to. The railroad question is absolutely eliminated from the bill; and that phase of the question stands precisely where it stood when the House passed its bill, which the Secretary of the Interior wanted. There is but one question left between the two Houses, and that does not at all affect the railroad company nor its requirement to establish depots and stations. The House bill fastens that, and has taken it out of this controversy.

The only question pending between the two Houses now is an amendment that the Senate put on the bill giving to the people of the two counties, the counties of O and L in the Territory of Oklahoma, the right after legal notice to hold an election, and by the votes of the qualified electors and citizens of those two counties to locate those two county seats. That is the only question left in controversy between the two Houses. Everything that was demanded against the railroads has been agreed to in the bill. They are bound to establish the depots and stations. The Interior Department has won its fight so far as its controversy with the railroads is concerned. I repeat that the only issue pending between the two Houses is as to whether the qualified voters, the bona fide citizens of these two counties, shall in conformity with the law, as provided in this bill, have the right by popular vote to select and determine their respective county seats. You can not bring anything else into this controversy.

The Senator from Arkansas insists that they should not have this right. The Senator from Arkansas knows that it is an open question, and that the trend of legal opinion is to the conclusion that unless the amendment put on by the Senate is incorporated into the bill those people will not have the right by vote to determine their county seats for five years to come.

If there ever was a time when the Senate ought not to recede from an amendment of such a nature as this one it is now, under the present conditions existing in that Territory and along these roads. There are two railroads affected instead of one. I have any number of telegrams and letters that I will not weary the Senate by having read. It is not needed. The press of the country has advised every Senator and every citizen of what is going on in these two counties by reason of this controversy.

The railroads have suffered enough. Dynamite has been employed. Their bridges have been blown to atoms, and their rolling stock has been set on fire and burned to ashes at different stations along the lines. That spirit of anarchy which seems to have pervaded other sections of the country has not been lacking there, and all because these railroads saw fit to object to going to the expense of from ten to twenty thousand dollars at each station to build station houses and depots every time that the caprice or whim of the Interior Department should change. They have stations and they have depots at the two towns of Old Enid and Round Pond, and were required to build other stations and other depots less than three miles from these sites.

I repeat that the Senate should not recede from the amendment. It is fair to presume that the Senate put the amendment on the bill deliberately, for it was put there by a yea-and-nay vote. Afterwards an effort was made to have the Senate recede from this contest, and the Senate refused. This was as far back as the early winter months. No change of condition has occurred since then except to demonstrate to us and to the public the greater necessity than we at that time believed to exist for the action that the Senate has taken.

But the issue can not be beclouded nor disguised. Those people, according to the opinion of the best lawyers who have examined the subject, will not have the right for five years to come by a vote of their own, although it should be a unanimous vote, to choose and select their county seats. The amendment of the Senate simply proposes to give them that right, and goes on to prescribe the term of notice that the governor shall give, the conditions under which the election shall be held, the qualifications that every voter shall possess. If the Senate recedes from its amendment, it simply means to declare that it will not permit the qualified voters and legal residents of those two counties to select for themselves by popular vote their respective county seats.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I can not permit the Senator from Kentucky to obscure this issue in the way he is apparently doing. The controversy here is simply whether the railroad company shall give to the people of these two towns the accommodations that they are required to give by the common law of the land.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to call his attention to the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will just read the bill exactly as it came from the other House, including section 1 on the first page and section 2 on the second page, down to the word "pass" in the 13th line, he will find that everything which relates to the accommodations to be furnished by the railroads stands precisely as it passed the House of Representatives without a word of change.

Mr. TELLER. I thoroughly understand that. I have no hesitation in saying that the proposition for a vote to change the county seat is a device of the railroad company to secure delay and the nonpassage of this bill. The Secretary of the Interior was authorized by law to establish the county seats of these two counties. He did so, provisionally at least. Thinking afterward that an undue advantage had been taken of the knowledge the people had to acquire the land for the purpose of speculation and monopoly, he moved the county seat from where he had originally placed it to a point from two miles and a half to three miles below. I think it was unfortunate that he did so. I have no doubt the Secretary was moved by proper motives, but I think it was a mistake.

At the new place where the land office was located a town grew up very much larger than the one originally designated as the county seat. The railroad company having located at this new town and some officials of the railroad company, if I am not misinformed, having become interested in the town site, they have declined from that time to this to give a population estimated at from 3,000 to 5,000 at least the accommodations of a station. The Senator from Kentucky says they ought not to be required to go to the expense. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky can not be ignorant of the fact that the people of these two towns repeatedly offered to give bonds to the company that all the expense of building a depot and establishing a station would be borne by them.

Last spring, when in the Indian Territory, a committee of the citizens of one of these towns came across the country a hundred miles to see our committee and to induce the committee, if possible, to go to that place and examine this question. We declined to do so, it not being within the purview of our inquiry. Later we passed on the railroad through the towns. It had been asserted on this floor with great emphasis that the town of South Enid was so located that the railroad company could not put a track there without great expense and great trouble and great danger. Standing upon the rear of the car as we approached that town, I am prepared to say, as one having had some experience in such matters, and some acquaintance with them, that there is not a word of truth in that statement.

At either of these towns there can be put in without any great expense a station which the people are and have been for a year ready and willing to pay for if this railroad company will discharge the duty that not only the statutes of the country but the common law puts upon them to give to the community a station.

I understand by the press that there has been some disorder there, although I am informed by private letters that it has been greatly exaggerated. I do not myself wonder at it. When I saw the train going through the town on the verge of the evening at a rate that was dangerous to human life, and knew that every man who was destined for that village had to go to another station and then return over the same ground which he had traveled, because the railroad company had declined to build a station at that point or allow it to be built at the expense of others, I felt indignant myself, and I think any fair-minded man would feel indignant.

Mr. BATE. What is the population there?

Mr. TELLER. The population of the town where there is no station is variously estimated at from 3,000 to 4,000. It is undoubtedly more than 3,000, and perhaps 5,000.

Now, there is no reason why this company should not put a station there, and there is no reason why we should attempt to say there shall be a vote as to whether there shall be a county seat at one place or the other. The question of county seats is absolutely disconnected from the question the other House sent to us.

It is very well understood by the people there that the company is very strong. It is true that they will probably wait five years under existing law, under a statute passed by the Legislature of that Territory, yet if there is a desire to have the county seat changed the people can do it through the Legislature by amending the statute.

This railroad company is an all-powerful organization. It is one of the great railroads of this country. It is one of the strong institutions in the United States, reaching out from the city of Chicago to the Gulf of Mexico.

It has vast influence and vast power. The people of that town know very well that it will make no difference what their vote is on the question of the location of a county seat, the railroad company is powerful enough to change it, and I have no doubt it is powerful enough to change the legislation and give them a vote.

That is not the reason why this amendment is pressed here. It is pressed so that there shall be no legislation upon the subject; that the matter may be kept here in conference, and the company shall not be required to build a depot at that station.

Mr. President, of all the indefensible things that have been done by railroads in this country in the last twenty years, there is not a single case so indefensible as the conduct of the Rock Island Railroad Company with reference to that community, and they have no business to be here appealing to us in the interest of their pet town or for any other purpose. If there was ever an occasion in the world that required the action of the Senate in receding from an ill-conceived and ill-considered proposition, this is one.

Mr. President, I do not blame the people there for being indignant. When the town ordinance provided first that the trains should stop, and then that they should go through the town at a rate of speed such as all municipalities everywhere have required, and have been upheld in requiring, this railroad company ignored it as if it had never been passed, and they go through these towns as they go through the open prairie. I repeat, of all the outrages which have been perpetrated by railroads in this country this has been the grossest, the most unreasonable, and the least called for of all.

So far as I am concerned, I should like to take this railroad company by the throat, if it could be done, and teach them that the Senate of the United States is not to be used for the purpose of enabling them to tyrannize and to outrage communities which have the rights possessed by all communities in the United States. They have their franchises over the public land, and those communities have privileges that the company ought to be bound to live up to. On the contrary, they have denied them to these thriving and growing towns, that can not have a pound of freight delivered, that can not buy wheat this coming fall at their stations, but all the wheat must go to a neighboring station. There can not be a pound of wheat or freight of any kind shipped to this center of population.

No passenger can stop there; everyone must go to the neighboring or rival town and then return. As we came through the upper town, Pond Creek, it was raining, and I heard the passengers on the train talking. There is a stream that runs between the two stations, and the passengers said, "We shall be unable to go down to-night. We shall be compelled to stay at the station, because it will be unsafe to cross that stream to-night." Now, that might not occur often, but it occurs sometimes. There is no reason, and none can be given by the Senator from Kentucky nor anybody else, why this case should be complicated with the county-seat question. Let this railroad company build their station, and if they do not build it compel them to do it.

I repeat, for a year the community has been anxious, if the railroad company would establish a station, to bear every dollar of the expense, and yet they decline; and now the whole question as to the railroad is wiped out and the only question is whether those poor people shall have an opportunity to vote on the county-seat matter. A petition has been sent here by more than three-quarters of the people of each of those counties in favor of letting the matter rest as it is so far as the county seats are concerned. We were told by this committee of reputable gentlemen which came to us, that more than three-quarters of the people in those counties had asserted that they did not want to change the county seat.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want this confused with the county-seat question. The question is whether we are going to compel a railroad company to build the stations, or whether we shall let them escape under cover of a county-seat fight from doing the duty that is incumbent upon them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the Senator from Colorado takes his seat will he allow me to ask him a question? If the Senator believed the report that was brought by that committee of gentlemen, that more than three-quarters of the people out there were opposed to any change or even to any location of the county seat, why is it that the peaceable people of that town, who use dynamite to destroy railroad bridges and burn up trains and loaded cars as they stand on the track, are afraid to let a vote be had?

Mr. TELLER. I have lived on the frontier half of my life, and I say here that there is nothing in the West which gets up bad blood like a county-seat fight. There is trouble and controversy, and frequently bloodshed, over these questions, when to an outside spectator they would appear to be apparently immaterial and inconsequential. The better portion of the people know that no contest carried on with this railroad company will be without bloodshed. We were told by the committee (and my knowledge of conditions in the West induces me to believe that they were correct) that there would be a controversy carried on to such a degree with this great railroad company, this irresponsible railroad company, this defiant railroad company on one side, that it will be unsafe for the majority on the other side to expect fair treatment, or that their voice will be potent in determining the county-seat question.

Mr. President, realizing what the condition of a new community is over the question of capital and county seats, we have in two appropriation bills inhibited the Legislature of the Territory of Oklahoma from locating the capital at any point except where Congress put it, and for the peace of this community and the peace of any new community, the county seat having been fixed by legal authority, it should remain there at least until the legislative authority of the Territory, which is competent to deal with the matter, shall act.

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand this question, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized by act of Congress to locate county seats in the Territory of Oklahoma, and under that authority he did locate certain county seats, and having so located them, many citizens invested their labor and their money in building up towns at those localities. But as the Territory was populated, rival and conflicting interests arose as to the exact point at which the county seat should be located; that is to say, the owners of real estate in localities other than those fixed by the order of the Secretary of the Interior desired the location of a county seat upon their lands or in their immediate vicinity.

It seems that the railroad company has become the partisan of these speculative individuals who desire to reverse the order legally made by the Secretary of the Interior fixing the points at which the county seats should be located, and as a means of carrying out this power it refuses to stop its trains at those towns or villages which have been built up; it refuses to give to those localities the ordinary transportation facilities which every town and every village in America located on a railroad line is entitled to expect and entitled to receive.

These railroad corporations were not organized for the purpose of controlling events such as seem now to be involved. They were organized for the sole purpose of giving to commercial communities and individuals transportation facilities; and it is no matter of theirs where the county seat of one county or another county may be located.

It is an officious, unauthorized, and improper interference upon the part of these common carriers. They ought to be compelled to give the necessary and usual facilities to the people who have built up villages or towns on their line. It is a monstrosity, in my opinion, to allow them even to be heard to make a demand that an election shall be held or anything else shall be done in respect of the location of county seats there. The people may control that matter hereafter in their own way and in a legal method, but for this corporation, for these common carriers, to undertake by force to control it is, in my judgment, an outrage.

I shall vote to recede from the amendment.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, there was, as I understand, no controversy in this region over the location of county seats. I understand that the county-seat controversy has been injected into this bill as a mere evasion, as a mere means of embarrassing the measure.

It will be remembered that this bill was reported to the Senate in January last. Although I have been in conference with gentlemen representing all these interests, I was surprised when it was proposed in the committee to inject a county-seat controversy into a bill which has for its purpose a very definite, clear, just, and proper object.

What were the facts then, and what are the facts now? There are two towns—there are others, perhaps, but I speak of two—which are some two and a half or three miles apart. One of them is at the station adopted by the Rock Island Railroad Company. Before the organization of the Territory the Secretary of the Interior selected a different point for the county seat. About that I care nothing. I have neither attacked, nor have I sought to defend or apologize for, the Secretary of the Interior. It was the fact at that time that there was at this town of Enid a population exceeding 2,000, claimed to exceed 3,000, who had assembled there within a short time, had acquired property, had built homes and erected public buildings. The town was an active, intelligent, industrious, thrifty community.

The railroad company refused to give them facilities which ought to be given. The committee simply found that this large number of persons, who had acquired property, formed a town, and established municipal regulations, were without the ordinary railroad facilities. It was proposed by the pending bill to compel the railroad company to perform its common law duty, its obligation, and the purpose for which the company was created, to afford reasonable facilities to communities. The railroad company refused. Various pretexts were suggested. Among them was the extraordinary cost of railroad facilities, switches, station houses, etc. I became satisfied that that was a mere pretext, which had no foundation in truth or justice.

There seemed to be no way by which this reasonable demand of these people could be resisted or thwarted, except by the introduction into this bill of a provision ordering an election for a county seat. Remember, the county seat controversy had no part in this matter until the present bill reached the Senate. It was thrown in merely to embarrass these people in their reasonable demands for railroad facilities. Now, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] tells us that we must not mistake the issue; that the question now is whether the people there shall have the right to vote upon the question of the location of their county seats. I tell him that that is not the question. The question is, whether there shall be thrust into this controversy this extraneous consideration which has no proper place here; that is to say, clearly these two or three thousand people have a right to reasonable railroad facilities. We are answered, "Yes, you can have that right, but it must be coupled with an extraneous and altogether irrelevant consideration, the location of a county seat."

Mr. President, the right of those people of Enid to railroad facilities does not depend upon whether it is a county seat or not. There are several thousand intelligent, industrious people who would be prosperous if they were allowed to be, who would be entitled to these facilities whether that place is a county seat or not. What has that got to do with it, I beg to be informed?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it will not interrupt my friend from Illinois, I will tell him.

Mr. PALMER. Not at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not wish to deprive these people of their railroad facilities, nor do I think it was fair when the other town of Enid, with as large or a larger population, was denied all postal facilities because the Secretary of the Interior went to the Postmaster-General and induced him to refuse to give them a post-office, and thus held it so for months and months. He admitted in the House committee room, as the Senator will remember, that he had gone to the Postmaster-General, who, at his instance, had denied a post-office to a town as big as this one, 3 miles away from it, where mail had to be hauled every day 3 miles, and those people were subjected to that inconvenience in order to get their mail.

Mr. PALMER. I have said distinctly that I neither defend nor apologize for the conduct of the Secretary of the Interior, because I deem it entirely immaterial what he did. If the Secretary of the Interior has failed to discharge his reasonable duty, he is responsible for doing so.

I alluded to the fact that this large population had settled there and acquired rights there, and if the Secretary of the Interior chooses to deny to another town their just rights, that is an irrelevant and immaterial matter; but are those people entitled to these facilities and ought the Senate see to it that they are secured to them? Is there any doubt about that?

I know in a former discussion something was said about the doctrine of local self-government. My theory of the doctrine—and I think my friend from Kansas lectured me somewhat on that ground—of local self-government, or of government, is that that government which has the power to do right, shall do right; and I am not disposed to deprive these people of a substantial right because there is no power in Oklahoma which can compel this railroad company to discharge its duty. That is the true issue.

Why shall the Senate adhere to this amendment? For what object? It is asserted that if the Senate recede, this will be the law and this company will be compelled to discharge its reasonable legal and moral duty, and that is the end of it. Why postpone it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me, as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has already taken pains to tell what occurred in the conference committee, I may be permitted to say that, if the Senate refuses to recede, this will be the law before this session ends, because a majority of the House conferees are in favor of the Senate amendment, and a majority of the Senate conferees are in favor of it. The Senator from Arkansas is to-day the only Senate conferee opposing it. The member from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] is the only conferee of the House who is against it.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have the authority of the Representative from Texas, who is a conferee, for that statement.

Mr. BERRY. I do not want any misapprehension to grow out of this matter. The conferees failed to agree. If it had been as the Senator from Kentucky states, there would have been an agreement, I take it, if the majority had so voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There could not be, as I stated.

Mr. BERRY. If they had voted as the Senator stated, there would have been an agreement.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not say they had so voted. I said a member from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] notified the conference committee that whenever the matter came to a vote in the House he was going to vote to accede to the Senate amendment, and that would make a majority of the conferees.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know what Mr. KILGORE would do on the vote; but in the conference committee he stood by the House conferees against the Senate amendment, and so voted every time a vote was taken.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He did, and coupled with that the statement I have made.

Mr. PALMER. It is not at all material to me what gentleman, named or unnamed, will or will not do. I have the opportunity now, and the Senate has the opportunity, to do the right thing. Why shall we not do it? What is the use of referring us to what the House will do or what the House may have done or what individual members of the House will do? By receding from this improper amendment we give to those people their substantial, reasonable rights. Why shall we decline?

Mr. President, something has been said about the disorder in that portion of the country. My experience is that in almost every instance of popular disorder the governing powers are to blame for it. It is misgovernment which creates disorder; it is bad government.

If it had not been for this amendment, which is so useless and so disconnected with the main subject of the bill, the Senate last January would have passed the bill as it came from the House, and given to those people their rights, and there would have been no disorder. If blood has been shed, it is not difficult to find the stains of the blood marks on those who failed to do the right and proper thing on the right and proper occasion. I am no apologist for disorder, but when men are oppressed and wronged and outraged by this railroad company, whose duty was so clear and so obvious, even if they should be guilty of disorder, while I do not defend them, I think I can at least see much to excuse.

We ought to have passed this bill, we ought to have given those people their rights. If we had done so there would have been no bloodshed, no dynamite used, no disorder. Bad government and misgovernment never fail to eventuate in disorder among a high-spirited people who, knowing their rights, sometimes assert them by unlawful means. In Illinois we have statutes and we have a public opinion which compels obedience to these duties.

But think of this railroad company, created by law for certain specified purposes, which are well understood, resisting the discharge of this plain duty when requested to do so by three thousand people, and that they should have the insolence to insist that, as a condition of granting these rights, there should be an election ordered in regard to county seats, as if the right of those three thousand people was in the slightest degree dependent upon the county-seat question.

Those people are settled in their homes there; their interests are there, and they have the right to demand these facilities. If the people shall choose to locate the county seat elsewhere, their rights are just the same; they are not dependent upon political considerations at all, and when an insolent, overbearing railroad organization, which, either by itself or by its members, is engaged in land speculations in town lots, is opposing the performance of its plain duty, I wonder that anyone would hesitate a moment in giving to the people that which so clearly belongs to them.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, when this subject was before the Senate upon the bill reported by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], I made some observations in regard to the obligations resting under their charter upon railroad corporations. In this case there is no ground, in my opinion, for any consideration of any other question than the obligation imposed by law upon a transportation company to comply with the obligations of its charter. It does not matter what action the Secretary of the Interior has taken, whether it was right or wrong; it does not matter what conflicting interests have arisen in regard to rival towns or locations. A large and respectable portion of the people of this Territory have presented the evidence to Congress that they have been denied the transportation facilities and rights which they are entitled to demand from this corporation. The subject has been before the Senate, and the obligation of this company to perform its duty has not been enforced by Congress. It is now for us to decide whether or not a corporation shall openly and defiantly refuse to perform the duties imposed by law and its charter obligation upon it to the people of the country.

As stated by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], there can not be a doubt that a corporation is created for the convenience of the public, to be their servants, to transport them and their freight and their commercial products to and from the places which are tributary to it, and to do it upon reasonable rates, and to establish depots wherever, within reasonable limitations of distance, the conveniences of the people require that it shall be done.

These are fundamental propositions. Why should they be covered up and why evade it? Why should we hesitate for a moment to say that the dignity of the American people, represented in the two Houses of Congress, shall demand a performance of this duty by all corporations? That is the question, and the only question, in my judgment; and the duty of this body, in my opinion, is to sustain the motion of the Senator from Arkansas and recede from this amendment, which has no connection whatever with the duty and obligation imposed upon this company to consult the conveniences and the wishes of this large number of the citizens of the United States who live upon the line of its road.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to recede from its amendment. When the bill was before the Senate heretofore, I took occasion to give some reasons why I thought the amendment ought not to be incorporated in the bill, and I have had no occasion since to change my opinion upon that point.

There is a history connected with this entire transaction, Mr. President, and in some respects that history appeals more or less strongly to the sympathy of Senators, and it is very natural that it should do so. To illustrate what I mean, some years ago under an act of Congress passed in 1887, I think it was, the Rock Island Railroad Company was given the right of way through the Indian Territory, and was permitted to establish stations, not further than ten miles apart.

Railroad men are business men; they are shrewd; they are men who can see as far forward as any other class of people, and nothing is more logical than to believe that the railroad men who laid out this route through the Indian Territory selected for their stations what, in their judgment, would in the future prove to be the best places for business. They did so. Two of these places that are concerned in this dispute were named Enid and Round Pond, some 10 miles apart.

When under the recent act of Congress, "the Strip," as it is called, was opened to settlement, the Secretary of the Interior sent an agent into the Nation, as we in Kansas call it, to locate town sites for county-seat purposes in pursuance of the act of Congress in that behalf enacted. The points that were recommended by the agent for county-seat purposes were the same places which the railroad people had designated when the route was laid out, namely, Enid and Round Pond, so far as the two counties of L and O are concerned; but for reasons which afterwards appeared satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, these selections were abandoned and two new selections were made, and one of them has been named, so far as the northern point is concerned, South Enid, located about three miles south of the place which the agent the Secretary of the Interior had appointed for that purpose had originally selected.

While it is not necessary for me to state what I understand to be the reasons which actuated the Secretary of the Interior, yet, perhaps, for a proper understanding on the part of those Senators who are not familiar with the subject, it may be well for me to say that by reason of certain Indians taking allotments, which they were authorized to take under the law, selecting their allotments near and within the borders of this original station, the town site of Enid, the Secretary was impressed with the belief that there was a scheme of some kind of land speculators in collusion with the railroad company to select these particular allotments near the station, and that the people for whom the county-seat locations were to be reserved would eventually be to a greater or less extent defrauded. From what the Secretary of the Interior stated in the presence of the Committee on Railroads, I am satisfied that that is a sufficient statement of what governed him in his determination to change the location.

Now, Mr. President, we come to that point where there is a disagreement between the railroad people and the persons who settled upon South Enid, the second selection, or rather the only selection, but the second point looked at by the Secretary of the Interior. The people who came into that vicinity to settle at the town, logically, very properly, and just as you and I would have done, Mr. President, instead of going to the railway station, went to South Enid, the point selected by the Secretary of the Interior, and in a little while a town grew up there of two or three or perhaps four thousand people. Now comes in the trouble between them and the railroad company. They ask the railroad company to stop there.

A bill is presented in Congress and passes the House to compel the railroad company to afford railway facilities and station facilities at the town of South Enid. That is what this bill provides. The railroad company insist—and here is where what seems an equity upon their part applies—that having located a town site under an act of Congress some years before at a proper place, and the first selection made by the agent of the Secretary of the Interior for that town site, now, before the railway company ought to be required to expend any money or to make any permanent investment at the new town site, it would be proper that the question of a permanent county seat be determined by the people at an election; and then, if so be that the people should determine in favor of South Enid, the railway company would take up their station at North Enid or Old Enid and move over to South Enid, and so on.

We all understand what there is in that. But, personally, I made a suggestion to the contending parties when this trouble first came up. My suggestion was that the people of South Enid should agree, and agree in writing in some satisfactory way, to defray the expense of erecting a temporary structure for station facilities at South Enid to give, to seize, to convey to the railway company all the necessary land for that purpose. The people of Enid agreed to that; they entered into a bond that they would do that. The railway company were not willing to accept that, unless accompanied by this proposition to hold a county-seat election and determine where the permanent county seat should be before they would act.

I have lived in Kansas a little more than twenty-four years, and I have seen a large number of local conflicts arising out of disputes about the location of county seats. I recall now one or two instances, one especially, which is vivid in my mind, which resulted finally in the dismemberment of a county and two new county seats being established, where men armed themselves, marched under arms to the opposing towns, and by force of arms took away the county books and county records, and moved them to another place. Names by the thousand were falsely and fraudulently put upon the poll-books, and the result of the election declared for one place, when honestly the result of the election was in favor of another place.

I know of a great many such instances, Mr. President. Our court records are not filled with them, but we have a great many cases which have been passed upon in the supreme court of the State adjudicating disputes of this kind. I know that a county-seat fight, as we call it out there, is the most bitter, the most offensive, the ugliest, the meanest, the most destructive local quarrel that can afflict any community, and it is because I want to avoid forcing a thing of that kind upon this new community in Oklahoma that I object to placing in the bill a proposition, first, to hold an election for county-seat purposes. I know just what the result of that will be. I can foresee bloodshed, I can foresee the destruction of property, the burning of houses, and all manner of wicked devices to destroy and to weaken the enemy. The bitterness that is engendered in contests of that kind goes down to the next generation. I know of these things personally from having seen so many of them.

In the Legislature when I was honored with a seat in the senate of the State we were compelled to dismember one county on account of this class of difficulties which had occurred among the people there. As to the responsibility of the railway company, I agree with the Senator from Illinois that we have gone to a point where the rights of the railway company ought not to be considered at all. We should consider the responsibility of the railroad company and its duties to the people. The people have rights over and above those of any corporation. Every corporation receives its rights, franchises, and privileges from the people. Wherever the people congregate in large numbers, so as to transact business and to make mail facilities and transportation facilities necessary for their comfort and their convenience, all carriers are bound under the common law to supply them with those facilities.

If they are not willing to do it without compulsory process, then it is time that the power of the law be brought to bear. I think I can safely predict that unless something of the kind is done and the railway company is forced by the power of the people to comply with the provisions of law laying down their duties, that the people themselves will take a large part of the matter in their own hands, and the destruction of property will follow. I have no doubt about it at all. I have seen things of the kind done in my own State. I have known instances where railroad tracks were torn up and buildings erected by railway companies torn down and destroyed.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator from Kansas believe that Congress should be at all influenced in legislation by the propositions now made, that somebody may tear up a railroad track?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes; I do believe it. I believe it is the duty of the legislator to take cognizance of existing conditions. The Senator from Wyoming has surely had experience enough with mob law in his own State to know that the passions of men are no different there from what they are in other places. I know we have a great deal of human nature in Kansas, and there are a great many Kansas men in Oklahoma Territory. We are all very much alike; we are all built very much the same way, and when it comes to matters of this kind, passions are aroused just like a prairie fire, and it seems impracticable to stop them.

In view of what there is in men, in view of what human nature has done, in view of what men may do, it is the duty of legislators to consider those things and to act accordingly. Men rarely resort to violence unless they at least believe that their rights have been trampled upon, and not in one case out of a thousand will they resort to violence until they have made up their minds that force has been unjustly applied to them. I do not defend violence, but I know what human nature is. We ought to take cognizance of that fact. I wish to avoid all the trouble which I foresee in the distance, and the only way I see to avoid it, so far as this proceeding is concerned, is for the Senate to recede from the amendment; and I hope it will do so.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I think the situation of this case has not changed since it was last before the Senate, except in one respect, and that is, that the people of the town which is asking that a railroad depot be established there have taken the law in their own hands, and have attacked the railroad, have destroyed property, blown up bridges, killed railroad employés, and now insist that we should recede from the amendment which we put on in the Senate in February last. If the other House had accepted the amendment which we put on in the Senate for a county-seat election, a depot would have been built at South Enid before this time under the act; but however much they want a depot, they will not have it upon condition that there is to be an election of the people of the county to determine where the county seat shall be. That is all there is in this case. The other House would have agreed with the Senate, but the people of the town of South Enid and Round Point insisted that it should not be done.

I do not see any reason why the Senate should change its action. The bill as it passed the Senate provides for the erection of depots by the railroad company within ninety days, I believe, after the passage of the act. If the bill had become a law in February, in concurrence with the action of the Senate, there would have been a depot there last May. The statement I have made shows what is the animus of this whole matter. The people want depot facilities at South Enid. Probably on general principles they have a right to have such facilities. I am not denying that, but they couple with it this——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut, whether, when he says that probably the people there ought to have those facilities, he doubts that they ought to have them.

Mr. PLATT. I do believe there will be a depot there in six months from this time, to be used and occupied, if it should happen to be determined that the county seat should be located somewhere else. The town would disappear over night.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to a fact which he must have noticed when he went through the town: It is in this town where the real buildings are; there is where the brick buildings are; there is where the money has gone. I assert, with as much knowledge of those things as the Senator can have, that there is no probability of ruining the town of South Enid. There is too much money there now.

Mr. PLATT. That may be, but I apprehend it would be a very small place, if it should continue to be any place at all, as it has grown up on the supposition that it was to be the county seat.

I desire to state simply one other thing about the matter, and that is that there has been no county seat located there. The Secretary of the Interior never had any authority to locate a county seat there, and there is no county seat located in the county. It is the hope that they can force the establishment of a county seat at that town by compelling the railroad company to stop its trains there which actuates the people of the place in this controversy. I do not think they ought ever to have come to Congress at all. I do not think it is a matter with which Congress ought to meddle. I do not think that even after all the discussion which we have had, all the newspaper discussions that have been had, or the telegrams that have been received here with regard to it, we understand the matter fully, and Congress never will understand it.

The Legislature of Oklahoma ought to be the body to settle the matter, and if it had not been that the Secretary of the Interior undertook to do and did do what was certainly a foolish act, an ill-considered act, and so far as he could indicated that the county seat should be at a very inconvenient place in the county, we never should have had any legislation asked for here. It was proposed to locate the county seat within 5 miles of the south line of the county, which is 30 miles across. There was an attempt to force the county seat to that place, because the Secretary of the Interior said there were some Indians who had located land near the place which his agent had told him was the proper site for county seat.

I do not wish to go into this whole controversy again. If the people of South Enid wished to have a depot they could have had it. If they had taken their hands off of their friends in the other House and let the amendment which the Senate put on the bill be agreed to, the people would have had a depot last May. They do not want a depot under such circumstances. They say, "The whole county wants the county seat in our town," but when you ask them why it is then that they object to the amendment, they have no answer to it.

The Committee on Railroads, looking the case all over, recommended as a just arrangement of the whole matter that there should be an election to determine where the county seat should be held, and the Senate adopted that plan. The other House has refused to act until this day, because the people who are demanding the depot will not have it if it is coupled with what the Senate thought was fair about the county seat election.

They say there will be bloodshed if they have a county seat election, and I think there will be, Mr. President. There has been bloodshed there already, but the bloodshed will be inaugurated by the people who are asking Congress to interfere. There will not be any bloodshed by the railroad or the officers of the railroad or anybody who is interested in the railroad, but I have not any doubt, from what has taken place there, that there will be bloodshed. It will be shed by the parties who have already commenced that business by blowing up bridges, tearing up tracks, shooting at railroad officials and employés, killing them on sight.

Yet those people come here and say we must have the depot at this place, but we will not have any county seat election. I think it is not a good time for the Senate to back out on their demand. We had better find out whether they propose to submit to law or whether they propose to take the law in their own hands. They had better answer the question why it is that they have been depriving themselves of the facilities which they ask because they will not have any county seat election.

Senators can not eliminate the county seat matter from the discussion. It was put into it not by the railroad company, but by the Secretary of the Interior, and the people who want these accommodations have kept it there ever since. The way for them to get their depot is for the Senate to insist upon its amendment. They can have the depot, under the terms of the bill, within ninety days after the approval of the act, and they could have had it last May if the bill had become a law.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is very doubtful whether, as the Senator from Connecticut says, the people of South Enid could have had a depot. The past history of this railroad company would justify any man in saying that they would have paid no attention to the edict of this or any other body. When the Senator seeks to give to the Senate the impression that this is a frontier town, which has grown up in a mushroom way, to be abandoned, he does injustice to the people who have built the town. I think the only brick buildings of any value are those in the town where there is no depot.

There are three and four story brick buildings there, and too much money has been put in the town for it to be abandoned, even if the county seat should be changed. Those people have gone there and invested their money with the understanding that it was the county seat. The Senator from Connecticut says it is not the county seat. They say it is, and practically it is. Whether it is so legally or not, it is not worth while to consider. There is where the courts are held; there is where the records are kept: there is where the United States land office was established, and it would be there whether there was or was not a court.

The Senator from Connecticut talks about violence. The violence was begotten by the misconduct of the railroad company. The violation of ordinances, the violation of statutes, the violation of the common law obligation which is put upon every railroad company, necessarily in time beget just what they have begotten in that country; and the railroad company is responsible for it. What portion of the community is responsible for those outrages? Only a few of the people. The greater and better part of the people are as clean and clear from it as the Senator from Connecticut. They are just as good people as he can find in any community in Connecticut. I do not wonder that some people, seeing lawlessness on the part of the railroad company, seeing their investments being destroyed, seeing the fall approach when they would wish to buy wheat and ship it out and not being able to do it, merchants seeing themselves ruined by the misconduct of the railroad company, assisted by the Senator from Connecticut, should forget themselves.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut says you can not disconnect the county-seat question. It was thrust in here to defeat the bill. It was put here by the enemies of the bill, and nearly one-half of the Senate was opposed to compelling the railroad company to build a station at all. Every enemy of the bill voted for that provision, and they voted for it for the purpose of defeating the bill. It is kept here for the purpose of defeating it; and the Senator from Connecticut can not escape now by saying that it is in the interest of good government. It is not in the interest of good government, and the Senator knows it and everybody else knows it. Nobody will be deceived by this kind of talk.

There has been an outrage on that community unequaled, I repeat, by any other in the history of railroads in this country. If a majority of the Senate want to perpetuate and keep it up, let us have it shown by a vote. Let Senators come out and fairly and squarely state that they do not think the railroad company is under any obligations to build a station there because they have built one 10 miles away. The railroad company is not asked to build it. The people proposed to build it and offered to build it, but the railroad is asked to stop its trains there, and it says it will not. That is all there is about it. I repeat it is not a question of the location of the county seat.

It is a question whether the railroad company shall be compelled by Congress to discharge the duties it owes to the people of that country. The issue may be squarely made, and if the Senate votes that it will not recede, the people will understand that the Senate means that the railroad company shall not discharge its duty, and that the Senate votes intelligently and purposely that the railroad company shall continue to defy law and decency as it has been doing for the last eighteen months.

It does not do to say that the Secretary of the Interior made a mistake or a blunder. I know that the prejudice against the Secretary had much to do with it, and that is the excuse Senators have made, that the Secretary made a mistake and a blunder.

Suppose he did; are the people to be held responsible for it? Suppose he ought to have kept the county seat where it was first suggested that it should be located and where it never was located; does that justify the railroad company, because some of its officials are holders of town lots in the new town or the proposed town, to destroy investments made at the other place, and to deny the right of the citizens of the town to that which every town in the United States is entitled, of having a railroad run through it?

Is the company to continue to do as it has been doing, violate town ordinances? It would be a pretty staid community, indeed, where such lawlessness on the part of the railroad company would not be met with just what it has been met with in that country—lawlessness on the part of the people. I do not excuse it, but I knew it would come. I knew that the people, finding themselves without remedy, finding themselves without any help from the only source from which it could come, would after awhile take the law in their own hands.

It is said the railroad company has suffered. It is entitled to no sympathy from us. If it had done its duty there would have been no outrages, no society disrupted and broken up, no outrages of any kind. There would have been peace there if the company had simply given to those people a station and let them pay for it. I do not see how any Senator can stand here and defend the railroad company, when he pretends that he is not defending it, and insist that there shall be put upon the bill that which he knows will bring greater calamities upon the people and must disrupt and destroy society there for the time, owing to the conditions which have been brought about by the railroad company primarily and for which it is responsible.

In the interest of peace in the community the bill ought to be passed, and it ought to be passed as it came from the other House. Then, if Senators want anything else done they can do it. The Legislature of the Territory will be able to settle the county-seat question. I doubt whether they are able to settle with the railroad company with its omnipotent power, as I know it exists in that section of the country, as it does in many others.

Mr. PLATT. When the Senator from Colorado gets his feelings thoroughly enlisted upon any subject he seems to make pretty strong statements of fact. In his last remarks, as well as in previous remarks, one principal cause of the grievance which he stated was that the people interested in the railroad company are speculators in town lots at the railroad town. In all the testimony I believe that has not been shown, and I think there is no evidence of it. It has been charged; it has been thrown out as a suspicion, but it has never been run down. They have never been able to show, I understand, that anybody in any way connected with the railroad company owns a lot anywhere near the railroad station town.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Connecticut will allow me to say that I never before heard it disputed.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, it was disputed in the last debate here, and it was disputed by the committee. It has never been proved. There has never been anybody, as I remember the case, who could put his finger upon a single individual connected with the railroad company who owns lots there.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose anybody has tried to do so; but no other reason can be given why the road has pursued the course it has pursued.

Mr. PLATT. That is just what I am coming to. The Senator from Colorado bases his whole argument upon the idea that somebody connected with the railroad is speculating in lots. He says there can be no other reason why the railroad has done what it has been doing.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Connecticut will allow me, I will say that I do not. If it were admitted that the railroad company had no interest, the facts would be the same as to the rights of the people. I myself have not any doubt, and I do not think the Senator from Connecticut has any doubt, about the interest of the railroad people. It may not have been proved to him, but he has not any doubt about it.

Mr. PLATT. I made pretty careful inquiry with regard to that matter, both of the parties who are opposed to the station town and of persons connected with the railroad company. I was assured, on inquiry, by everybody connected with the railroad company there that no stockholder, no director, no person connected with the railroad company has any speculative holding in lots.

Now, it is very easy under the excitement of feelings to be carried away and to argue a case upon facts which do not exist. It is very easy to justify what those parties there have done. It is very easy to accuse the railroad company of desiring to speculate in city lots and to justify people who have blown up its bridges and killed its employés because the railroad company, for the purpose of speculating in city lots, has not done justice to them.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator from Connecticut mean to insinuate, much less charge, that I did justify it.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Colorado did not justify it in language; he said he did not; but after all, the whole tenor of his remarks was that the people were excusable for it on account of the great wrong which had been done by the railroad company.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Connecticut is entirely mistaken. I never suggested that they were excusable. I said that one crime begets crime. The Senator desires intentionally to misrepresent me, I suppose.

Mr. PLATT. No, I do not; but I think every Senator who listened to the Senator from Colorado was impressed, as I was, with the idea that he was treating very leniently in his own mind and estimation the men who have been guilty of these acts of violence. It is a good deal like the people who sympathize entirely with the strikers in Chicago. There was no word of condemnation for the strikers and their acts of violence, but it was only for Mr. Pullman and the railroad companies that they had condemnation.

Mr. BERRY. I think the Senator from Connecticut is mistaken when he says any person was killed in the Territory. I do not think any person was killed. My opinion is that there was not. The Senator talks about citizens violating the law. It is stated, and not denied, that the railroad company deliberately violated the law which regulated the speed of railroad trains through the town, a matter which the town had a right to regulate. The railroad company deliberately violated the law, and it did so before anybody else violated it.

Mr. PLATT. Ergo, the people had a right to blow up the bridge! That is the style of this argument. I have heard that the town passed an ordinance that the road should not run its trains at a rate through the place above a certain number of miles per hour, a very slow rate of speed; and then when the train slowed down to that rate, the citizens came out and undertook to pull the employés off the train.

Mr. TELLER. They never slowed down.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes; the company complied with it for a awhile, until they found that they could not, with safety to the lives of their employés, comply with it any longer, as I understand. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] knows more about the details than I do.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My understanding is, and I do not think I can be mistaken about it, that three employés of the road were killed outright and the whole train was ditched. The timbers were deliberately sawn in two, because according to the time schedule of the road a passenger train would be the next one to go over the bridge. However, by an accidental delay, fortunately it turned out that it was not a passenger train that came according to the schedule, but a freight train. The train was ditched and three employés of the railroad were killed. But that is not what I wish to get at.

I regret that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] should undertake to-day to indulge himself in a very questionable practice, and that is to interpret the motives and purposes of his friends in the Chamber or of people out of it. He said that everybody who insists upon the Senate amendment is trying to kill the bill.

Mr. TELLER. No; I did not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Colorado is usually very clear in his statements.

Mr. TELLER. I said everybody who wanted to kill the bill is for the amendment. There is quite a difference between the two statements.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, let me say once more for the information of the Senator from Colorado, the bill is as sure to become a law if the Senate should refuse to recede from the amendment as it is provided it took the other course. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] stands here alone, the only dissenting conferee on the part of the Senate.

The House conferees by a majority will vote to accede to this Senate amendment to-day. There is but one member of the Senate conference committee who is not in favor of the amendment. There is but one member of the House portion of the conference committee who does not declare his purpose to vote to take the bill with the Senate amendment. So to insist upon keeping the amendment in not only does not kill the bill, but it insures the passage of the bill as certainly as to recede from the amendment, and it facilitates the passage of the bill. It will be law quicker if the Senate refuses to recede from its amendment.

Further, I want to say there is not a provision in the bill that the opponents of the two railroads did not put into it. The bill stands precisely, without changing a semicolon or a comma, as the House of Representatives passed it—I will not say at the dictation, but at the request of the Interior Department. The bill as it stands to-day imposes every obligation that any anti-railroad man ever sought to impose upon the railroads. Why can not the Legislature of the Territory of Oklahoma deal with the railroad question as a whole as with this county-seat question? No, no; the friends of this bill (I mean the original House bill) insist that Congress must exercise its power, and no lawyer will claim that that is an exclusive power.

If Congress has any jurisdiction of this railroad question it is a concurrent jurisdiction, for the Legislature of the Territory confessedly holds jurisdiction of the railroad question. But these gentlemen could not wait to let the Territorial Legislature deal with the railroad. They insisted that Congress must do it, and they framed a bill and the House passed it, and we have reported it back here without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" so far as any railroad question is concerned. If you want power to force the railroad company to build station houses and establish depots at every hundred feet along that line through the Territory you have it unquestionably here in this bill. There is not a question affecting either of the railroads that the Senate has touched at all. The Senate has simply inserted an amendment and has once refused to recede from that amendment by a yea-and-nay vote.

A majority of the House conferees tell us now that they are ready to accept that amendment in the face of all this lawlessness. Troops were sent to both Pond Creek and South Enid, these new arbitrarily established towns, and both of them were put under martial law. The law-abiding, outraged citizens for whom we hear such plaintive appeals are to-day under martial law, with Federal bayonets there trying to protect lives and persons and property—people who used dynamite to blow up a railroad bridge, who sawed the timbers of another, and ditched a freight train instead of a passenger train, as they tried and expected to do. Here are all the letters, affidavits, and telegrams supporting and sustaining the statement, and the official action of the War Department sustains it, that here in a time of profound peace are these two arbitrarily established mushroom villages bidding defiance to all law except martial law, of which they are the righteous victims to-day, with the bayonets of the Federal Army at their throats.

Those are people for whom the Senate is asked to recede from its deliberately taken action, because, forsooth, those law-abiding people in such lawful manner protest against the proposed legislation!

I repeat, Mr. President, and I will have done with it, there never has yet been a suggestion made to fasten responsibilities upon the railroad company, to put them under the arbitrary discretionary power of the Interior Department, which is not in this bill precisely as the Interior Department asked to put it there. There is nothing else in the bill except a declaration that the people of the two counties shall, not between the two towns but anywhere within the limits of the counties, have the right that all freemen have, to meet according to legal proclamation, hold a fair and honest election, and determine by a majority of the qualified voters of the counties where they will put their county seats.

I do not believe that either one of the towns will be selected as the county seat, neither Old Enid or New Enid. It would be ridiculous for either of them to be selected. There is but one issue left between the two Houses. So far as compelling the railroads to build stations and depots at every 50 feet through that Territory, if the Secretary of the Interior requires it, it is all in the bill and all agreed to. There is nothing left in dispute between the Houses except that the people of those two counties shall have the right by a popular vote of the qualified voters of the county to locate and choose their county seats and not be barred, as they are now barred by law, from selecting a county seat for five years.

That is the whole question, and on behalf of the law-abiding people of those counties, on behalf of more than four thousand of their law-abiding citizens, whose petitions I hold here asking for the privilege of selecting these county seats, I have the temerity to ask the Senate to stand by its amendment even though the lawless creatures who are now the victims of martial law in these two mushroom towns shall be disappointed and thwarted in their purposes.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments. I want to make a plain statement of fact, and then I hope the vote will be taken.

When the Secretary of the Interior located these towns under the law there was not a human soul living in either of them. The persons who went there had no choice as to where they should be located. The law authorized the Secretary to make the location. These people were camped on the outside of the Territory. They had gone from the East, the West, and the South to seek homes in that new Territory which was to be opened by the Government; and they only had to look to the law to see who was authorized to locate the county seat, and to observe the act of the Secretary when he did locate it.

On the very day that Territory was opened those people in good faith went and settled at the point where the law authorized the Secretary to place the location. They invested the accumulations of a lifetime in building houses and improving the surroundings connected with their homes. They did it in as good faith and with purposes as innocent as ever actuated men. Now, what followed? The railroad company was interested in another town 3 miles away, and the railroad company said, "We do not propose to give you any railroad facilities at these two towns, because we desire that other towns shall be built up."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator allow me a question?

Mr. BERRY. Please do not interrupt me now. Later I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

The railroad company refused, but the people continued to move in there until the towns grew, one of them to be a place of some three thousand inhabitants, and the other of eighteen hundred or two thousand inhabitants. They built dwelling houses there because the county seats had been located there by legal authority. When they found that the railroad company would not give them depot facilities, either for passengers or freight, they came to the lower House of Congress and asked that body to pass a bill compelling the railroad company to stop their trains. The railroad company sent a lobby of attorneys here, who appeared before the House committee and opposed the bill with all the power they had. The committee reported against the railroad company. The House ratified the action of the committee, and passed a bill saying "You shall give these people depot facilities." The bill then came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

When the railroad company found that they were beaten, and that the Senate was going to compel them to do it, and they had no other remedy, they came in and undertook to put this amendment on the bill with no other purpose in the world except to defeat the measure which had been passed by the House. They know to-day that the bill with the Senate amendment upon it can not pass the House. They know that unless the Senate recedes from its amendment those towns will get no railroad facilities.

Now, that was the condition. Those people bore it as law-abiding people, and they are as law-abiding as any people in this Union. There were as good people located there as can be found in the States of Kentucky, Arkansas, Ohio, or any other State in the Union. They came to the Senate; they sent their petitions here from the mayor and the council and every citizen within the town.

The bill hung here for weeks. When it was likely to pass the other parties then resorted to forgery and forged telegrams to try to influence the Senate of the United States. The people, still law-abiding, waited for the action of the Senate, and when the Senate put the amendment on the bill it went to the conference committee. We met on two or three occasions in conference and we have failed to agree. The other House refused to recede and has continued to refuse. The Senator from Kentucky says that the House would now agree to the amendment. I say that it has refused, and with the same right to say what it will do in the future that the Senator has, I say it will continue to refuse; and if this amendment stays in the bill those people will get no railroad facilities. What followed?

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not interrupt me now. Later on, before I take my seat, I will answer all questions.

What followed? When the tariff bill was before the Senate it was impossible for me to find time without interfering with that bill to make a report. The matter went on for weeks and months. Those people had made a bond and offered to bear every dollar of expense for the building of these depots, and yet the railroad corporation said, "No, you shall have none." Then what did they do? Those towns passed ordinances regulating the speed with which the trains should run through the towns, because the speed at which they ran endangered human life.

The railroad company defied them, paid no attention to their ordinances, and ran their trains through the town at the rate of 20 or 25 miles an hour. What followed? It followed that there were some people in that town who became exasperated. It was not all the people, but a comparatively few, because the others are law-abiding. Owing to this repeated wrong on the part of the railroad company in refusing to stop there to take on the women and children of the town, and refusing to stop to put them off when they had been away on a journey, some of those people resorted to lawless acts. I justify no man in violating the law; no word that I can utter here can be construed in that way; but I say no people ever had a greater provocation to violate the law. I do not justify it, but there is not a community throughout the United States of America where such outrageous acts would not be calculated to incite violence on the other side.

Now, this is the question that is presented to the Senate. As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] well said, in all the history of railroad wrongs throughout this country, in all the culmination of the great railroads with all their capital, there is no case on record which shows a greater disregard for the rights and interests of a community of people than this Rock Island Railroad Company has shown for the rights and interests of the people of Enid and Pond Creek.

Will the Senate of the United States stand here talking about the county-seat question, which is under the control of the Oklahoma Legislature, when a railroad forces this amendment on with the avowed purpose of beating the bill? Will a majority of the United States Senate say that those people have no rights which we are bound to protect; that because they have no Senator upon this floor to speak for them we will let this railroad company outrage them and continue to wrong them as they have done for the last six or eight months?

Mr. President, I hope that will not be the case. If you want peace and quiet and order you must first do what is right, and then you will have peace and quiet and order. There is not a man within the sound of my voice who does not know that this railroad company have acted in the most arbitrary, tyrannical, unjustifiable, and inexcusable manner possible. I sincerely trust the Senate will recede from the amendment and accept the House bill, and then this controversy will be ended forever.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. By the House bill I observe that the railroad company are compelled to establish a station at all towns where the Secretary of the Interior establishes a town site; and that they must have a depot. I wish to inquire if a town site has been established at the new town where they are now deprived of a depot?

Mr. BERRY. The bill requires——

Mr. STEWART. No; I want to know if there is a town site there.

Mr. BERRY. Where?

Mr. STEWART. At the new town, South Enid, or whatever is the name.

Mr. BERRY. Yes; there is.

Mr. STEWART. There is a town site established there?

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Then, under the bill if it is passed as it now stands, the railroad company would be compelled to establish a station there?

Mr. BERRY. That is correct. That is the object.

Mr. STEWART. Then with or without the amendment they are given all that they ask for, to wit, a station. That is all they claim, is it not?

Mr. BERRY. I will say, if the Senator will permit me, that the House of Representatives will not agree to that amendment. It can not pass the other House and the railroad company know it can not pass, and it is for that reason that they insist upon the Senate standing by it, because that kills the bill.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the question.

Mr. BERRY. That can not be disguised.

Mr. STEWART. Would not the town of Enid get a station under the bill?

Mr. BERRY. If the bill becomes a law, it would.

Mr. STEWART. With or without the amendment?

Mr. BERRY. If the bill ever bacomes a law, then the railroad company will have to stop their trains there unless they defy the law.

Mr. STEWART. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to correct two statements made by the Senator from Arkansas, and I can do it in two sentences. In the first place he spoke of his statement as a fact. Now, to be a fact it must be in proof in this record or it must be within the limits of his personal information. He said that between these two neighboring towns the railroad company refused to give one town depot facilities because the company were interested in real-estate investments in the other town.

Mr. BERRY. No, I did not say any such thing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will refer to the notes of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. BERRY. I will refer to the Reporter's notes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am speaking of the Reporter's notes of the Senator's speech.

Mr. BERRY. I shall not touch them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, I will say that there is not an atom of proof in this record to the effect that any official, or any man connected with either of these railroads, ever had a dollar or a penny invested in any real estate in either of these towns; but upon the contrary this record is loaded down with affidavits, taken, sworn to, and executed before notaries public of every official of this railroad, swearing that not a man of them ever did have or now has a penny invested in any town lots in either of these towns, and those affidavits have never been controverted or attacked.

I wish to say one thing more. The Senator took occasion to state several months ago in one of his impassioned harangues upon this bill that this railroad company had sent a lobby here to lobby their interests through. I stood in my place on the floor of the Senate and saw an official of the Federal Government, borne upon the pay roll of the Government, appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, haunting that gallery. I asked him what he was here for, and he told me frankly that whilst the Secretary of the Interior had not ordered him to come back from Oklahoma, and did not know anything about it, he was here as the bearer of petitions in the interest of those who opposed the amendment which the Senate put upon the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it or is it not true that two villages or towns built up there the Secretary of the Interior has decided to be county-seat points?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; the Secretary of the Interior has no more authority or power to determine a county seat in a Territory than the Senator from Tennessee or myself.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Kentucky deny that under an act of Congress the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to locate the county seats in Oklahoma?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do; and I say that there never was such a law dreamed of on earth.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well. I have not the law before me and I have not hunted it up.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Perhaps the Senator is confounding the words "Government town sites" with "county sites."

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; no matter whether a town site or a county site.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does matter, I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HARRIS. Did the Secretary of the Interior have power to locate a town or a village under the act?

Mr. BLACKBURN. He had no power to locate a county site. He had power to locate a Government town site.

Mr. HARRIS. Then let me ask the Senator another question. Is it true as a matter of fact that two villages or towns have been built up in Oklahoma Territory at which and through which the railroad runs and at which the railroad refuses to stop and give to that community reasonable and fair transportation facilities?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is the Senator through?

Mr. HARRIS. I want that question answered. It is an important point, to my mind.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is the Senator through with his question?

Mr. HARRIS. I am through with that branch of it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not agreed to answer more than one branch of the question.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; let the Senator answer that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer the Senator, and I will answer him twice, so as to be sure that I satisfy him. It is true that the Secretary of the Interior sent his own private agent to the Territory of Oklahoma with private instructions to locate, not county sites, but Government town sites.

That agent selected two points, one on each of these two roads, for reasons that I doubt not were satisfactory to that agent, and so reported to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior refused (which is not a usual performance) to locate a Government town site at either of the places his agent had selected, and traveled two or three miles distant, one way or the other, from each of them, and made two new selections. It is true that through those two newly selected towns, the afterthought of the agent if not of the Department, these roads ran, and that they had no stations or depots built there. It was the object of the House bill to compel the roads to build them, and the bill as the Senate has amended it not only compels both railroads to build depots and station-houses at both these towns, but compels those railroads to build depots and stations at any and every other town where the Secretary of the Interior tells them to build one in that Territory. That is the bill as it now stands amended.

Mr. HARRIS. Now, will the Senator from Kentucky answer the other question, which I deem the most important?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do so.

Mr. HARRIS. Have towns been built up there along the line of that road?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought I said yes, at both points.

Mr. HARRIS. And do the railroads run trains that sweep through those towns without stopping at either of them?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know about that.

Mr. HARRIS. Such is the allegation. If it be a fact, it is an unmitigated outrage and it ought to be controlled by legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am so fond of hearing the Senator speak, that I am always willing to let him not only ask questions, but make speeches in my time.

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad the Senator is so deferential. It is very rare that he is deferential to anybody.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do it because it is rarely that I have the opportunity of learning so much.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that is true.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What I say in answer is simply this: Admit that the roads run their trains through these towns at 60 miles an hour and never stop at all, what the Senator wants to do, I take it, is to compel them to stop, and to compel them to erect depots and station houses and give a full measure of traveling facilities to those people. That is precisely what I want to do. That is precisely what this bill does, exactly as it stands amended by the Senate now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know so little about this matter that perhaps I will disclose my ignorance by asking a question. Is it true that on the line of this railroad in Oklahoma there are two towns, one containing 1,800 people and the other containing 3,000 people, within 3 miles of each other?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I say if a railroad in a new country will not stop at a point containing 1,800 and 3,000 inhabitants it is a very poorly managed railroad, and I think myself we ought to require the railroad, even if it becomes so important as the Pennsylvania Central Railroad, to stop at a community containing 1,800 inhabitants.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree with the Senator, and I beg him to read the bill as amended by the Senate, when he will see that that is precisely what the bill does.

Mr. SHERMAN. But I do not see the connection between the amendment made in the Senate and the bill itself. What has the question of town sites to do with that? Probably, as the Senator himself said a while ago, neither place would become the county seat.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly both of the towns will not survive. One of them will disappear whenever the question of the county seat is determined.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the use of blending the county-seat question with the stopping of the trains?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The two questions have no connection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I do not see any object in insisting on the amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. For the reason that I have tried to explain, but it seems that I have failed, that under the law as it stands to-day, the best legal authority that can be had tells us that unless the amendment of the Senate stays in the bill, the question of locating the county seat can not be determined for a period of five years, and all of this friction must endure and all of this trouble must be perpetuated.

Whenever a county seat is determined, we know that in a sparsely settled country like that, these two towns, within a stone's throw of each other, will not both survive; one will disappear. They are Western prairie towns; they are tent towns. You have heard about the two or three story brick house there. Of course every town of two or three thousand inhabitants out there has one, but that is not the rule. If the county seat is established at one of these towns the other town will move to it within a week. The pending proposition would keep open this friction, and it will keep it up, because the law will not allow them to determine the county seat by a vote for five years to come.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is another wonder. I am discovering things about these Western Territories that I never knew. Is there not some power vested by law in somebody to establish a county seat there—in the people themselves or in the Territory?

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, for I wish to get all the information I can upon the subject.

Mr. BERRY. There is a statute of Oklahoma which provides that when a certain number of inhabitants of any county, I think it is one-third, shall petition the county court or the proper authorities to order an election for the location of a county seat, thereupon the order shall be granted, and the people shall vote for the location.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that provided for by law?

Mr. BERRY. That is the Oklahoma law. The statute to which the Senator from Kentucky refers, I presume, says that when a town site is once located it shall not thereafter be changed for the period of five years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Who made that law?

Mr. BERRY. The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, and that is the law to-day. The Legislature of the Territory of Oklahoma can repeal that law when they meet in December, and can order a town-site election at any time. That, I think, no one denies.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does seem to me that we ought to make the railroad company stop its trains at both the towns and let the surviving town have a depot probably somewhere between the two.

Mr. BERRY. Let the Legislature of Oklahoma settle it.

Mr. SHERMAN. As to the other part of the case I see no difficulty. If the law is as stated, the people themselves can have an election as to the location of the county seat without Congress interfering with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but there seems to be some doubt as to how he would vote on this question.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Delaware voted "yea" before.

Mr. CULLOM. But I think from what I have heard I had better not vote. Under the circumstances, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. WHITE (after having voted in the affirmative). When I voted I did not observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], with whom I am paired, is not present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). I have been requested to pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I inquire who has authority to pair the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BERRY. I have.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] has requested me to pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Arkansas has stated that the junior Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea" if present. Is there any question as to how he would vote?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied.

Mr. MANDERSON. I withdraw my vote, understanding that the junior Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I ask consent to withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's vote will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] for one moment. I am informed that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON] is absent, unpaired, and that if he were here he would vote "nay." I suggest, therefore, that he stand paired with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY].

Mr. BERRY. I do not know anything about that. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to make the transfer he can do so. I only know that the junior Senator from Kentucky told me he would vote "yea;" and he told me he would be here to vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. The arrangement I have announced will pair the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON]. I understand the Senator from Kentucky would vote "yea" and the Senator from Michigan would vote "nay." I vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (after Mr. GALLINGER had voted in the affirmative). The present occupant of the chair will announce that he has voted, but he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who has not voted, and hence the vote will be withdrawn.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 20; as follows:

INTERSTATE FAIR AT TACOMA, WASH.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Missouri, in charge of the sundry civil appropriation bill, if he will yield to me for a few moments to report a bill from the Committee on Finance, and to ask for its present consideration? It will not, I am sure, occasion any debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I report back from the Committee on Finance without amendment the bill (H. R. 7753) to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the interstate fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties. I ask for its immediate consideration. The fair, I understand, opens to-day.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 65 to the bill (H. R. 6937) "making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 65.

WILKINSON CALL,
CALVIN S. BRICE,
S. M. CULLOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. H. HATCH,
W. S. FORMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2896) for the relief of Henry James, residing in the original Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas; and the bill (H. R. 6720) providing for resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 7753) to exempt the articles of foreign exhibitors at the interstate fair at Tacoma, Wash., from the payment of duties; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the unfinished business may be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the consideration of the two pending amendments, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] and the amendment proposed by me.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let those amendments be now acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER). The amendments will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment proposed by Mr. PROCTOR, which was on page 84, at the end of line 8, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War and the Attorney-General are hereby instructed to report to Congress what action has been taken by them or their predecessors in office under the act of July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington," and under previous acts, and to report the present condition of the titles to the water rights and to such land contiguous thereto as may be necessary for the improvement of the water power at Great Falls to a sufficient extent to furnish an adequate supply of water for the District of Columbia and to furnish power for lighting the public buildings and grounds by electricity, and to report, further, the amount and present condition of claims now pending against the United States growing out of its taking or use of the water at Great Falls. And the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for carrying out the provisions of this act and for making the plans for the plant necessary for said purpose, with estimates of the cost, and also of the cost of operating and maintaining the plant for electric lighting and a comparison with the present cost of lighting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment:

Said Secretary of War is also hereby authorized to negotiate with the Great Falls Manufacturing Company and the other owners of land and water rights at the Great Falls, with a view of settling existing claims on the part of said owners against the United States and of acquiring the title to said lands and the whole of said water right, and to report the result, with his views, at the next session of Congress.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I shall vote for both of these amendments, and at the same time I wish to say that that which commends them to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] does not commend them to me. That which commends them to him is the fact that they commit the Government to nothing. I should be very glad to vote to commit the Government to something in this behalf.

The amendment which I proposed yesterday had the same purpose as these amendments; but it went a little further, and looked to the acquiring of the title of the Great Falls of the Potomac and the land adjacent, at least such as might become necessary for the water supply of the city of Washington and for its electric lighting. I am glad to see this recognition of the necessity, that all must admit, that as this city grows in population, which it is bound to do, the subject of pure water, and plenty of it, as suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], will be a very important one.

Mr. CULLOM. Which we do not have now.

Mr. MANDERSON. The water supply now, as is notorious, is inadequate. This city is really in great danger in time of extended fire: that such a conflagration might destroy an immense amount of property, by the side of which the cost of improved water facilities would be a mere bagatelle.

This city will have to repeat at some time the experience of the city of Philadelphia. That city obtained its water supply from the Schuylkill River, and the evil became so great as to the contamination of the waters of that river, that that city, at enormous cost, was compelled to acquire the title to land on both sides of the river to prevent impurities from flowing into it. That will unquestionably at some time be the experience here. We shall have to see that the waters of the Potomac River are not contaminated by placing upon the banks of that stream above the point of supply manufacturing establishments, which will cause refuse to be thrown into the river to produce an impure condition of the water.

I wish we could go still further than this amendment provides; but it is a step in the right direction, and shall certainly receive my support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 15, on page 92, it is proposed to insert:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Gettysburg, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of Northern Virginia, to assist in such way as the Secretary of War may direct in preparing the historical tablets of that army for the Gettysburg battlefield.

Mr. HUNTON. That amendment carries no appropriation with it, Mr. President.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Virginia will leave out of his amendment the limitation of the persons from whom the Secretary is to appoint.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that that was put in the amendment designating the assistant commissioner as one skilled in the movement of the army of the Confederate States, because there are now two commissioners representing the armies of the Potomac.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be captious about this, and there is no objection to the employment, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, of such person as will be fittest, wherever he may be found; but I, for one, object to putting into the legislation of this country as a qualification for an office that the person to be appointed to it has borne arms against the country. I do not think it is sound statesmanship that anybody on either side of the question should undertake to do that thing. Of course, we all know that there are brave veterans on both sides of this Chamber, and there are others who hold offices under all political parties; that is one thing; but the actual putting into a law as the sole qualification of appointment to an office of having borne arms against the country I think is carrying the joke a little too far.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say, in connection with that amendment, that the Committee on Appropriations did not agree to it; on the contrary, in another amendment elsewhere we struck out a similar provision, because we believe that under each of these laws the Secretary of War has the authority now to employ such assistants, if he desires them, and we did not wish to place ourselves in a position of dictating to him whom he shall employ to ascertain the facts which we require him to ascertain.

Mr. HOAR. That seems to be the sensible view of the matter, and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator from Missouri, in charge of the bill, is mistaken, though I dislike to make the assertion that he is mistaken in regard to a bill of which he is in charge. If he will turn to page 86, to the provision in regard to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, he will find that by an amendment of the committee the very thing is provided in a general way which I ask be provided for more specifically in regard to Gettysburg. The prevision reads:

The purchase of the north end of Missionary Ridge, and monument sites in the vicinity of Glass's Mill, compensation of two civilian commissioners and their assistant in historical work, labor, clerical, and other assistance, etc.

The words "and other assistance" embrace as to the Chickamauga battlefield just what I have provided more specifically as to the battlefield of Gettysburg. For that reason I think that there ought to be an amendment in regard to the battlefield of Gettysburg which will authorize the Secretary of War to employ an assistant commissioner to help do the work which is being done to mark the historic battlefield of Gettysburg.

I beg to say that at this time there are two commissioners who represent the Army of the Potomac. An immense deal of work, as the Senator from Massachusetts well knows, has been done to mark the positions, etc., of the Union Army on that battlefield. There has recently been appointed one commissioner from the South, who is supposed to represent the Army of Northern Virginia for a like purpose; but that commissioner has just been appointed, and scarcely any work has been done to mark the battlefield and the position of troops, etc., of the Army of Northern Virginia.

I do not want to offend the sensibilities of the Senator from Massachusetts by talking about anybody who was in the Confederate States army, and therefore I am perfectly willing to amend the phraseology so as to make the appointment rest upon a man who is familiar with the movements of the Army of Northern Virginia. With that modification it seems to me the amendment can not meet with the objection of anybody on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia propose to modify the amendment?

Mr. HUNTON. If the Secretary will send me the amendment, I will change it.

Mr. VILAS. At this point I might as well make some observations, if the Senator from Missouri does not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to say a few words with reference to the other amendment which has already been pro forma adopted, and which I shall ask to have reserved in the Senate. I trust it will not be adopted by the Senate. I should like the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the point for just one moment.

The House of Representatives inserted in the bill with reference to the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Park the following words, after the general appropriation for completing the park and providing for tablets, etc.:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ—

at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Chattanooga, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of the Tennessee, to assist, in such way as the Secretary of War may direct, in preparing the historical tablets of that army for the National Military Park.

If the Government of the United States is to assume to place in these parks tablets locating the points of important events in the great struggles which took place on the fields of Chattanooga and Chickamaugua, and I may say the same thing of Gettysburg, the most essential and desirable thing of all in connection with it is fidelity to the fact. The Army of the Tennessee, which redeemed the national losses preceding that time in the battle at Chattanooga, bearing by far the heaviest brunt of the struggle, which fought over so many fields and traversed all but two of the States that were engaged in collision with the Federal Government, which fought many a battle and never lost one, ought to have the privilege of being represented by some accredited, trustworthy, and well-informed officer, who will see to it simply that the mere truth is preserved in these tablets.

In equal fashion and upon the same principle I am perfectly willing, I should desire, that an officer representing, if you please, or some person well instructed and informed as to the Confederate side of the controversy, should also contribute his knowledge, and such as he may collate, to the truth, in order that the tablets upon the battlefields may be what they ought to be, indicative of the facts.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, who is better informed than I am, if the present Secretary of War is, in his judgment, so destitute of patriotic emotion or of wisdom that he can not be trusted in this matter?

Mr. VILAS. The question can hardly be asked with seriousness by a member of this body. It would be a reproach to the Senator if he were to ask the question with serious purpose. The Secretary of War, and every Secretary of War, is and must be a patriotic citizen; but the Secretary of War can not know about all the battlefields of the country, and he may well be advised by the Congress of the United States to accept some suggestions from those societies which represent the men who put their lives in peril on those fields in that great struggle.

I do not care to revive unnecessarily recollections of this kind, but I insist that it is right as the House of Representatives have provided in the bill, and that the provision which has been made there ought not to be struck out of the bill by the Senate of the United States, which would be a very different thing from having omitted it in the first place.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, there is something in words after all. These battlefields ought to be memorials of facts. The position of troops on a field of battle is a matter of very great importance to those interested in the matter. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] has prepared a modification of the amendment, which I suppose will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to withdraw his objection to the phraseology, and let the amendment go as I drew it, because we are bound, in taking up the history of these battlefields, to recognize the fact that one side was fought by the Union Army and the other side by the Confederate army.

Without desiring to revive unpleasant memories and rekindle the embers of the war, I desire to have in the amendment which I propose a representative of the Army of Northern Virginia, because that representative must know more about the sites and the position of the different parts of the Army of Northern Virginia, which participated in that fight, than anybody outside of that army. I feel a personal interest in this matter because, as is no news to many of my friends on the floor of the Senate, I was one of the participants, as a member of the Army of Northern Virginia, in the historic battle of Gettysburg. Therefore it is a matter of personal interest to me that all that was done by the Army of Northern Virginia upon that battlefield should be marked correctly and go down to posterity as a correct history of the events of that eventful day.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Virginia will pardon me, I will state that I do not think he or the Senator from Wisconsin has struck my point. I do not think there is any objection in the mind of any Senator to having this done, and properly done. I suppose the Secretary of War may be absolutely trusted to make the appointment of a person who knows the facts, and who knows the facts on that side. Nobody supposes that any Secretary of War would fail to take a man who was an active participant there, as has been done in all other cases.

My proposition is that it is not a good thing, as a method of legislation, to define as a qualification to the holding of public office that the man shall have borne arms against his country. It is a thing which has to be explained. The Senator can not doubt that if he simply said "some suitable person," if he used the phrase that he has already once consented to adopt, it will result in the appointment of a person satisfactory to him.

My whole proposition is that such a legislative precedent as is proposed should not be set. It ought to be regarded with some care. It is not a good plan to say in a statute, "Provided the person so appointed shall have borne arms against his country."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I desire very much that there shall be a representative of the Confederate forces present to actually participate in the marking of the position of the Confederate army. It is something like the old-fashioned processions which we used to see in Kentucky when the surveyor was about to enter upon his work. He would carry with him a number of witnesses to see that the corners were properly established, and they attested it because they knew. These memorials must have the indorsement of the Confederate authority to make them authentic and of historic value.

The evolutions and movements of armies on a battlefield are always interesting, and I wish to have a representative of the Confederate forces present when the marks are made, so that the country can refer to the marks as settled by authorities on both sides. We are always disputing as to what were our positions. Sometimes we think we were a good deal farther in their direction than they admit, and sometimes they claim to have been much nearer to us than we confess.

I wish to have partial witnesses present. I desire that the positions shall be marked so that the country will know that they have been selected by persons representing each side. It was a mere physical struggle so far as the men were concerned. The great events and the great issues are a different matter altogether. I wish to give an illustration of that. There are Senators who know where I was on one occasion, and I know, in a general way, where they were—some distance apart. In fixing the position of the troops at Missionary Ridge, if you will, I should like to have a Senator now in my eye present, so that when the point is being fixed I should have his testimony that that was the true point. If he and I were to differ about it, we might want to call in some third person to settle the question as to which one was right.

These great historic facts ought, because of independent and patriotic considerations, to be settled by men on both sides who were present and who participated. We are all men, and we all believe we were very courageous and gallant soldiers; and when we come to settle the position of earnest men, participants on each side ought to be consulted in order to give to the marks on the battlefield authenticity, and the field may be thus preserved as a part of the history of the country.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am thoroughly indifferent as to whether this work shall or shall not go on; I have no objection to its going on, and I think it proper enough to mark those points, so that future generations may see exactly where great events transpired; but I wish to make a single suggestion, based upon a fact which occurred some years ago. A very much more important matter, in my opinion, was the making up of the Records of the War of the Rebellion.

Several years ago, by virtue of a provision in an appropriation act, a commission was appointed by the Secretary of War to determine what I conceive to be a very grave and a very important question, as to what documents should or should not be printed as a part of the war records. It did not designate whence the members of the commission should come, and the then Secretary of War, in the exercise of his legal authority, appointed the commission, every member of which was taken from those who had been in the Union Army, and no representative of the Confederate element was to be consulted in respect to what should be or should not be printed as a part of the war records.

In that condition of affairs I drafted a letter, addressed to the Secretary of War, appealing to his sense of justice to give to the Confederate army some fit and proper representative to have at least a still small voice on the commission in determining the great and important question as to what should or should not be printed. The Secretary answered me in most courteous and polite terms, but declined. Up to this hour the commission has been composed of representatives from the Union Army, and no single man of the Confederate armies has belonged to it or has had a voice in determining the question as to what shall or shall not be printed as a part of the records of the war.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from New Hampshire may.

Mr. CHANDLER. Was the Senator treated in that way by the present Secretary of War?

Mr. HARRIS. I have not renewed, as I remember, and I do not think I have, any request of the present Secretary of War upon that particular point or any other point that I now remember which involves considerations of the same character; but if the Senator desires me to say so I will state that I have great respect for the absolute fairness, justice, and propriety of conduct of the present Secretary of War. However, if I were to frame a law requiring the performance of any duty such as this, every consideration of fairness would demand, and it ought to be respected, that both sides should be heard in the matter.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to say, in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], that I can see no difference between saying what you want done and trusting to a man to do that which you want done. If we believe that the Secretary of War will do this, then let us say that he shall do it. I can not see the difference between the two propositions.

As to the objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], I wish to say that you can not, to save your life, recognize the battle of Gettysburg without recognizing the Army of Northern Virginia, because there could not have been a battle without two armies, and there could not have been a battle without two contending armies.

The contending armies in that case, as a matter of history known to everybody, were the Union Army on the one side and the Army of Northern Virginia, the Confederate Army, on the other. When we know that the Union Army is represented by two commissioners in marking that historic field, I can not see how it can offend the sensibilities of any gentleman to say that a representative of the other contending army shall be there to assist in marking the prominent places in the fight occupied by it, to wit, the Army of Northern Virginia or the Confederate Army. I do not wish to bring up any unpleasant memories or to offend the sensibilities of any gentleman. I would not intentionally have drawn the amendment so as to have offended the sensibilities of even the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Virginia understand that anybody has suggested that his sensibilities have been offended?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; but I took it for granted that the Senator's sensibilities were a little stirred up or he would not have objected to the phraseology.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Virginia will pardon me. I think I can differ with him as to the proper phraseology in a legislative enactment without its becoming a question of sensibility.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOAR. That is the trouble with my honorable friend from Virginia. He seems to make a question of sensibility of what to other people is a question of common sense.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection to the phraseology of the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to being explicit in the direction to the Secretary of War, if the Senator from Virginia wishes to be so explicit. But the Senator will bear in mind that he is making history as well as giving directions to the Secretary of War. The history of a country is sometimes read in its public statutes.

Now, the Senator will notice, if he will read the amendment, that the ingenuous youth of this country off in the distant day of our prosperity and glory reading the statute would not be able to discover what the Army of Northern Virginia was. The Senator from Virginia knows and I know, but the language does not indicate whether the Army of Northern Virginia was a part of the Union Army or the rebel army. If the Senator wishes to be precise and accurate, it seems to me it would be a good idea to state in the amendment exactly to which side the Army of Northern Virginia belonged. If the Senator will look at the amendment he will see that nobody can tell.

Mr. HUNTON. If the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to have such an amendment adopted, let him propose it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Virginia has spoken of one side and the other, and he wishes to give directions that the Confederate side shall be recognized in this appointment.

There is no objection to it. Of course the Secretary of War will appoint a person who belonged to that side. I am inclined to think the Secretary of War has already picked out the man, perhaps recommended to him by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; I have never opened my mouth to the Secretary of War on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course the Secretary would take the recommendation of the Senator from Virginia if this new office be created on his motion.

I suggest to the Senator for the sake of historical accuracy, as the subject has taken up a great deal of time and as we ought not to depart from its consideration without its being accurately disposed of, that he insert before the words "Army of Northern Virginia" a statement as to which side the Army of Northern Virginia was on, so that future readers of history may not be mistaken as to precisely what the Senator meant.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into this debate. In reading the amendment, however, it seems to me there can be no objection whatever to it. Neither do I see that there is any particular objection to the insertion of the words "Confederate," and "Union," or anything that is agreeable to those who desire it. The object, I understand, is to get at the truth of history. You can not get history from the testimony of one side alone. I understand Gettysburg is a little differently situated in its management from Chickamauga and Chattanooga or Missionary Ridge. The park is now called by the name of both, but there were two distinct battles, the battle of Chickamauga and the battle of Chattanooga or Missionary Ridge.

The ground over which those battles were fought is combined in one park now, and it is under very proper regulations. There are employed there representatives of both opposing armies, and not from one alone. History could not be made truthfully and correctly if it were so. There is a commissioner there who was upon the Union side and another who was upon the Confederate side. They are highly intelligent and cultivated ex-officers, who took part in both of these battles. They are there now, and have been for a year or two, for the purpose of laying off the ground, locating roads, gathering evidence personally and from official reports, to guide them in planting monuments wherever it is necessary in order to indicate where particular lines were; and I understand this is being done in the most harmonious and satisfactory manner.

There is an act requiring that the commissioners shall be appointed, and, as I now recollect, the management for carrying out the act is left to the commissioners themselves under certain regulations which have been adopted by the commission or board.

I am very much pleased to say, sir, having been upon the Confederate side myself, that I was most fairly and warmly met by those on the other side, some of whom were in this body and members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and we all agreed that whatever the rights of one side were, similar rights should belong to the other; that the Confederate side and the Union side should have like privileges and like representatives. That, Mr. President, was the agreement, and the work is going on most harmoniously and efficiently.

Now, as to Gettysburg I am not informed. I understand, however, that it seems to have been conducted as a one-sided affair. There has been no one there representing the Confederate side, and they only mark the lines of the Union Army. They do not show the lines of the Confederate army which confronted the Union Army. So, in the end, when you come to look at Gettysburg from a historical standpoint it makes it ridiculous, for it takes opposing lines to make a battle. It is different at Chickamauga Park. Those historic fields—Chickamauga and Missionary Ridge—are being carefully surveyed and mapped by ex-Union and ex-Confederate officers together, who are there for that purpose and are competent to do the work. They are no doubt faithful in their work, and the marks or monuments they place will tell, as far as possible, where every single regiment or brigade, division, or army corps was; where it attacked and where it resisted assault; where it advanced, where retreated, etc. This will be a contribution to history—an object lesson for the historian.

That makes history which will be worth something. But when you have it on one side only, it seems to me there will be much embarrassment when the historian goes to record the truths drawn from facts. When the light of truth shall dispel the shadows of prejudice, the impartial writer will want to look at both sides, just as each army was when the great conflicts occurred.

Mr. HUNTON. I have agreed to modify my amendment in deference to the wishes of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. In line 2, after the word "reasonable," strike out "from among those veterans who served in the battle of Gettysburg." The amendment will then read as follows:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of Northern Virginia, to assist in such way as the Secretary of War may direct in preparing the historical tablets of that army for the Gettysburg battlefield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask the Senator from Missouri if he will not now consent to reconsider the committee amendment on page 86?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be reconsidered and be open for the action of the Senate.

Mr. VILAS. If that may be reconsidered and the amendment of the committee disagreed to, that ends the matter. It may as well be disposed of at once.

Mr. COCKRELL. I still think that what we did was right. The Senate can act upon it. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate struck out the following lines, commencing in line 25, page 86:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Chattanooga, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of the Tennessee, to assist, in such way as the Secretary of War may direct, in preparing the historical tablets of that Army for the National Military Park.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to reconsider the vote by which the amendment indicated was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I ask that the proposed amendment be now disagreed to, and then it leaves the record right.

Mr. COCKRELL. The proposition now is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the words which I have just read. We reported to strike out those words simply because with the words "and other" in line 24, on page 86, the Secretary of War could employ the gentleman whom it is desired to have represent the Army of the Tennessee. We had an application to employ some one else representing the other side to this identical place, and we rejected both propositions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words which the Committee on Appropriations proposed to have stricken out will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. The lines are drawn through at the foot of page 86.

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, etc.

The SECRETARY. Beginning in line 25, page 86, strike out the following words:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Chattanooga, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of the Tennessee, to assist, in such way as the Secretary of War may direct, in preparing the historical tablets of that army for the National Military Park.

Mr. VILAS. I simply ask that the proposed amendment of the committee in striking out those words be disagreed to, and that the clause be allowed to stand as passed by the other House.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that is done, if the Senator from Tennessee has any amendment to offer to the paragraph it is now in order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Tennessee will certainly offer an amendment when it is open to amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is open now. A motion to perfect the text takes precedence of a motion to strike out.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to insert at the proper point that the Secretary of War shall appoint a person well informed—using the same language—"from both the Union and the Confederate sides of the question," in whatever proper form the words present that idea.

Mr. HOAR. Let me suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin to make the provision correspond with the amendment which has just been adopted, which is acceptable to both sides.

Mr. BATE. I will move to amend the paragraph.

Mr. HARRIS. I have not the bill before me. Let my colleague offer the amendment.

Mr. BATE. In line 5, after the word "assist," I move to insert "and also a like person as the representative of the Confederate army," so that each will have a representative.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to say in one word, believing that I thoroughly know the feeling of the Army of the Tennessee and of the Union soldiers engaged in that battle and who now survive the war, that they will heartily welcome any such contribution to the truth of history. There is not one of them now living who is not ready to extend his hand in the equal, honest, sincere fellowship of citizens of a common country, redeemed and saved, with all that should destroy it left as far as possible to oblivion; and they will be perfectly ready to accept any such contribution or aid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "employ," in line 1, page 87, strike out—

at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Chattanooga.

And insert after the word "Tennessee," in line 5—

And also a like person as a representative of the Confederate army.

Mr. BATE. I wish to insert the words "Chickamauga and" just preceding the word "Chattanooga;" so as to read "Chickamauga and Chattanooga," because both names should be included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will be so modified.

Mr. BATE. It is part of the same park and has been purchased alike by the Government and is now under the contral of the commissioners alike, but it is known as Chickamaugo park.

Mr. VILAS. I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to withdraw the last suggestion, for I am sure on a moment's reflection he will see that that addition is not needed. The proposal is to have a representative of the Army of the Tennessee, well instructed in its history. It is not necessary that he should have fought in both battles in order to be satisfactory. It is only that the Army of the Tennessee performed its greatest service in the battle of Chattanooga.

Mr. BATE. I will change the word "and" to "or," so as to read, "Chickamauga or Chattanooga."

Mr. VILAS. Very good; I have no objection to that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, as modified.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to have the paragraph read as it will stand after these numerous amendments have been inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as it would read if amended on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The SECRETARY. Amend the clause, beginning after the word "dollars," in line 25, page 86, so as to read:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to employ, at such compensation as he shall deem reasonable, from among those veterans who served in the battle of Chattanooga or Chickamauga, a person who is recognized as well informed in its history, as a representative of the Army of the Tennessee, and also a like person as a representative of the Confederate army, to assist, in such way as the Secretary of War may direct, in preparing the historical tablets of that army for the National Military Park.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, by legislation of Congress two great national parks have been established, one in the East, at Gettysburg, and the other in the West, the battlefield of Chickamauga, taking in the ground about the city of Chattanooga, Missionary Ridge, Tunnel Hill, and Lookout Mountain. I know it is the earnest desire of those who served on both sides during the war of the rebellion that to these two great parks there should be added another. The battle of Shiloh, fought on the 6th and 7th days of April, 1862, made Pittsburg Landing and its vicinity sacred ground, and I hope that the action had as to Chickamauga and vicinity and Gettysburg will be supplemented by having the battlefield of Shiloh also made a national park.

Mr. President, none of these historic fields are of any advantage to the man who proposes to study warfare, and that is an important study, unless the lines of the two contending armies are clearly and distinctly marked, and they must be marked in this day and generation. It is extremely difficult from any of the reports made of these battlefields or from any surveys made of them to fix the exact position of the different parts of the contending armies.

It was my fortune to have been in the battle of Shiloh and also at Chattanooga. I never revisited the battlefield of Shiloh, but I did a few years ago go to Chattanooga and visit the ground in that vicinity. I went over that part of the field over which the command to which I then belonged passed. It was extremely difficult for me to fix the exact line, and yet before I left the place I was able to fix to my entire satisfaction at least the exact position held by the regiment I then commanded.

Now, there is no conflict of opinion or discordant view among those who survive these great battles and who fought on either side. They are anxious that the action which has been taken shall be supplemented. They are desirous that among any employés who may be selected both sides of this controversy shall be represented; and I am very glad to see that there is recognition here of the fact which is a necessity, that those who were on the Confederate side should help select the lines of battle of their forces.

I am not disturbed in mind about the wording of the amendment, but I think perhaps better wording, as we are apt to be a little choice in language that may at some time grate severely upon our ears, would be to say that these persons shall be the representatives of the two contending armies. In that way there would be no allusion which could offend the most sensitive and delicate ear. But I will move no such amendment. I simply desire that this action shall be taken and I hope it will be held in conference.

I know that on the battlefield about Chattanooga and at Shiloh the survivors of both the great armies have met for the purpose of interchange of views. On the 6th and 7th days of last April there met at the battlefield of Shiloh or at Pittsburg Landing prominent officers of both armies. They explored and went over the field together. It was a delightful object lesson in that harmony and unity of feeling that we all now have with reference to matters of this kind.

Those great armies have passed away except those who have grown gray and are the survivors of the conflict, and with the passing of the years the animosities that were enkindled by the war have disappeared. We who fought for the Union and were of the army of the country have ever been ready to recognize the valor and the bravery of those who fought upon the other side, believing just as earnestly and sincerely now as we believed over a quarter of a century ago that we were right and they were wrong, and the facts of history have justified very fully our conclusion in this regard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE] to perfect the paragraph proposed to be stricken out by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on striking out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. VILAS. The Senate ought to disagree to the amendment of the committee, which is to strike out the whole paragraph, which has been amended.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAMERON. At the end of line 14, page 2, I move to insert:

For post-office and custom-house at Chester, Pa., in excess of present limits the sum of $20,000, for completion of said building of stone instead of brick.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 61, line 14, I move to strike out the word "two."

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator from Idaho to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. DUBOIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Idaho yields to me to offer an amendment which will only take a moment, as I understand his amendment may bring out some discussion. On page 53, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

For the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $4,000.

I will say that there is a letter here from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending it. I think it was by some oversight that it did not get before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 7, page 53, insert:

For the protection of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask that my amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 14, before the word "hundred," strike out "two" and insert "four," and in line 15, strike out "and seventy-five," before the word "thousand;" so as to read:

For surveys of public lands, $400,000.

Mr. DUBOIS. On the 28th of last March I introduced an amendment to increase the amount for surveys of public lands from $175,000, which was the amount appropriated by the House, to $400,000. That amendment was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and fairly and thoroughly considered there, and reported unanimously from the committee.

The amount of $400,000 which I propose is the estimate of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He says that he can not successfully prosecute these surveys with any less amount. We have had this discussion in the Senate for a number of years. We always have it in the other House. It is impossible to get an adequate amount of money to survey our public lands. For the last several years there has never been appropriated less than $400,000 for this purpose. That amount has to be distributed among the States which have public lands, and it leaves but a small sum for each State, which is entirely inadequate. In the State of Idaho alone it will require $32,500 this year to survey lands which settlers on those lands occupy and who have petitioned for surveys. The amount apportioned to Idaho with an appropriation of $400,000 will not be $32,500; in other words, it will not be sufficient to survey lands which settlers have petitioned to be surveyed and upon which they now reside. I know of a number of settlers near my own town who live on improved farms which they can not get surveyed.

There is not one-third of the land in my State, for instance, which has been surveyed. This is a loss to the Government and a loss to the people. It is a damage in every direction. Whenever the lands are surveyed the settler makes his final proof and pays the Government $1.25 an acre, or whatever may be the price. The money advanced for surveys is only a temporary loan. When the surveys are made the lands are taken up; they are bought from the Government, and the money is returned to the Government.

In addition to the hardships on the actual settlers upon the lands, when the new States were admitted to the Union large donations were given them for educational and other institutions, amounting to more than 500,000 acres in each case. Those lands can not be surveyed. There is not money sufficient to survey them. In consequence of that fact those States are being deprived of that great boon which the Government intended to give them.

There is no economy in refusing to appropriate properly for a survey of these lands. Besides, it has always been the custom of the Government to survey public lands. There is not a foot of land in Indiana, Missouri, or any of those States which has not been surveyed at Government expense. We are following in the line of precedent, and there is no occasion why we should be limited and deprive our settlers of the chance to acquire title to their lands. Until these lands are surveyed no taxes are paid on them; no taxes are collected for school purposes or county or municipal purposes of any kind or description. You deprive the States of the advantage of the taxes which justly belong to them.

There are great valleys in the arid regions which can not be settled upon until canals are run. There is a provision of law now, which is proper enough, that those lands on which settlers are located shall be first surveyed. No settlers can locate upon these lands until after the water ditches are run. Therefore these lands can not be surveyed, for the settlers take precedence, and very properly so. Other Senators will discuss the amendment. I trust that the Senate will accept the amendment and give $400,000 for this purpose, which is as small an amount as has been granted for a number of years, and is entirely inadequate. I desire to submit as a part of my remarks—I will not detain the Senate by having it read—a letter from the board of land commissioners of the State of Idaho, which is quite comprehensive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

STATE BOARD LAND COMMISSIONERS,
Boise City, Idaho, March 27, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The action of the honorable House of Representatives in reducing the appropriation for public surveys must certainly have been founded on very erroneous information. Forty thousand dollars would be a very small appropriation for surveys in the State of Idaho alone. At present not one-third of the area of the State is surveyed. The immense forests of magnificent timber in the northern part of the State are practically unsurveyed. For years the forests of Idaho have been a favorite poaching ground for timber depredators in the northwest. The fact that the land is unsurveyed removes it from the operation of laws whereby private individuals might secure title and virtually compels those desiring timber to become depredators and violators of the law. Where timber is taken from the public domain illegally, only the choicest portions of trees are removed, all limbs and tops are left on the ground a menace to the growing timber around them.

Every fall witnesses destructive fires in the timber region, directly traceable to the limbs, tops, and other débris left by the depredators. If these lands can be surveyed and rendered subject to the operation of laws for the disposition of the timber lands, they will rapidly pass into the hands of private owners, who will protect their own interests, and in doing so save from destruction timber remaining in possession of the Government. Very much of the land covered by timber in the north is most valuable for agricultural purposes when the timber is removed; but homestead settlers will not locate in Kootenai, Shoshone, Idaho, Nez Perce, and Latah Counties, in the timber regions, under existing conditions. Without surveys, settlers know not where the lines of their claims will run, and they can not clear the land of the growing timber prior to securing title, without exposing themselves to prosecution for violating the laws relative to timber depredations.

Thousands upon thousands of would-be settlers have passed Idaho by, trusting to securing a home in a less favored region, but one in which surveys have been made. Kootenai County, had it been fully surveyed, would have doubled its population during the past year. The lack of surveys in that region has been an embargo upon settlement. Peculiar conditions exist in the great Snake River Valley that lies entirely within the arid belt; the limited amount of water afforded by lateral streams was long ago appropriated for irrigation purposes by settlers in order to reclaim land. Now, there are hundreds of thousands of acres subject to reclamation and water must be taken from the Snake River itself and conveyed to the land to be reclaimed. This work involves very great expense and it is exceedingly difficult under the most favorable conditions to secure the construction of canals.

The laws and the regulations of the Department of the Interior now require that an individual applicant for a survey shall be a bona fide settler upon the land for the survey of which application is made. In the arid region it is impossible for settlers to subsist upon lands until such time as water for irrigation purposes shall have been conveyed upon them; in other words, the irrigation ditch must precede the settler. As a consequence of this there are no settlers in the arid belt to apply for surveys, however much they may be needed. The records of the various land offices will show very many locations of desert claims upon unsurveyed lands. These locations are made invariably in anticipation of the construction of canals; but the desert law does not require actual settlement upon the land, and hence, although the land is claimed in good faith under the desert land law, still the claimants can not make the affidavits necessary to accompany applications for survey; and so far as the Department can tell from its records, there is absolutely no need for the survey of such lands, when in fact thousands of acres are actually under location and ready to be proved up upon so soon as surveys are made.

At present the State under its various grants from Congress, is entitled to select something like four hundred thousand acres of land for various purposes. A great deal has been selected under special grants, but very much remains unselected under them. No lieu selections have yet been made for school land losses, that is, losses consequent upon settlement prior to survey on sections 16 and 36. It is to the interest of every State having unsatisfied grants to secure a speedy survey of the public domain; without surveys the State is powerless. If liberal appropriations could be made for the survey of the lands desired by the State for selection, the best interests of the various institutions intended to be benefited by the legislative grants would be secured, and the objects of Congress in making the grants would be accomplished. Official selectors have examined various sections of the State with a view to the making of selections when the land shall be surveyed.

If now appropriations were available the State could make application, the lands could be surveyed, the State take a portion in satisfaction of its grants, and a great deal of surveyed land be left subject to settlement by individuals. If anything can be done to increase the appropriation for surveys of the public lands, as the same passed the House, no effort should be spared to accomplish the object. Every State in the Northwest is interested, but Idaho most of all.

I make the above statement under and by direction of the State Board of Land Commissioners.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

F. A. FENN, Chief Clerk.

Hon. FRED T. DUBOIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I am in most hearty accord with what the Senator from Idaho has just stated. I know that settlers in the new States are very much annoyed, and they are frequently put to a great deal of inconvenience as well as expense because the lands upon which they have settled have not been surveyed. It often happens that citizens will organize associations among themselves, and go to the nearest base line that had been established formerly by Government surveys, and as nearly as they can, with the appliances at hand, trace problematical or hypothetical lines as nearly as possible to learn how to locate their dwellings and how to arrange their home conveniences, and frequently in such cases it happens that the parties have made mistakes so great as that when the surveys actually come to be made they will find their buildings on land not belonging to the particular quarter section or half section or section that they supposed or that belonged to them, and much inconvenience and sometimes much loss is occasioned in that way.

There are other private and personal inconveniences, but there are the public inconveniences to which the Senator from Idaho referred in the matter of taxation. None of the unsurveyed lands are subject to taxation, and therefore no public revenue can be derived from them until after they have been surveyed and the ownership is identified. In all of our new States we learn very early that taxation is a great burden upon us. A county when it is organized has all of the officers which are prescribed or provided for in the law of the State, and they are paid by the day, or month, or year, as the case may be. All that is provided for, and the people who own taxable property and they alone are those out of whose pockets comes the public revenue. So one of our first aims is to get as much of our land surveyed as possible, and the owners properly located, and the titles upon the county records.

We have had in the State of Kansas a great deal of trouble with the Pacific Railway Company, who own a large amount of land under a grant from Congress, but refused to have the lands surveyed, and as long as they were not surveyed the State received no taxes from them; the counties received no taxes, the school districts received no taxes, nor the towns which were located upon those lands. So the survey of the lands becomes a very important matter.

In view of these considerations and others which might be mentioned, and to which I would refer if it were not for detaining the Senate so long, I hope that the committee having in charge the bill will consent to the amendment substantially in the form in which it is presented by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, to insert after the word "lands," on page 61, line 14, the words "and the irrigation and survey of the arid and semiarid lands of the United States," so that when amended the sentence will read:

For surveys of public lands and the irrigation and survey of the arid and semiarid lands of the United States, $400,000.

I am heartily in favor of raising the sum to the amount included in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. I think sound public policy requires that the Government should survey as rapidly as possible every foot of the public lands of the country. Those who live in the West understand the inconvenience of living in a country where the lands are not properly surveyed and the proper field notes of them kept. Immigration is thereby retarded to a very great extent; those who desire to go into the Western country and settle upon the public lands are prevented from doing so, while great cattle organizations and stock-raising organizations are permitted to occupy valuable public land without any compensation whatever to the Government. Much of the trouble which occurred in the State of Wyoming in 1892 grew out of the fact that a portion of the public lands in that State were not surveyed and open to settlement.

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that while I believe in making public surveys, when the Senator says that the trouble in Wyoming grew out of neglect to survey the public lands he is mistaken.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply state what was current history at that time, which I do not personally know anything about, and that is that the contest in the State of Wyoming—and I care nothing about its merits one way or the other—arose between what were known as the cattlemen there and the rustlers, or the actual settlers. Those contests, as I am informed, were in consequence of the actual settlers going upon public lands which were occupied by the cattle companies and making settlements. I believe that to be true. I believe that was the primary cause of the unseemly and bloody struggle which occurred in that State in 1892.

Apart from that, however, and upon the amendment which I have offered, I desire to say that it seems to me that wise public policy would require on the part of this Government an irrigation survey of all the millions of arid and semiarid lands in this country which can be brought into proper cultivation with the proper distribution of water. There are millions of acres of the most fertile lands in this country which could be opened to settlement by actual settlers and cultivated to great advantage to them and to the country at large, adding much to the aggregate national wealth, if we would devise a scheme of irrigation. The only thing those sections of the country lack is a sufficient amount of water supply to produce in abundance the cereals and everything required for sustaining our people.

Nothing, so far as I understand, has been done in that line. To every appeal which has been made to Congress to introduce irrigation surveys, to ascertain by proper surveys the places for the construction of irrigation channels, and to ascertain the proper data upon which irrigation can be entered upon successfully, Congress has turned a deaf ear.

Wherever irrigation has been introduced on these arid and semiarid lands, even on a small scale, it has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the world that these lands can be cultivated with great profit. I need not stand here and contend, for the fact is too well known, that it is good, sound national policy to open every acre of public land in this country and make wise and judicious donations of it for the purpose of bringing these arid and semiarid lands under cultivation.

The loss of crops annually to the country and to the people who have gone upon these lands, and who can sometimes in consequence of a beneficent rainfall raise immense and profitable crops, but who are overtaken occasionally by an extreme drought, as was the case this year, it seems to me would almost pay for the cost of irrigation surveys and the introduction of a system of irrigation.

I believe the time is at hand when this country must take hold of this question of irrigation, and when these millions and millions of arid lands in the country must be opened up by the General Government, so that the surplus population of the country, which is congesting in our cities and threatening the safety of the nation itself, can be thrown out upon these lands to cultivate them with profit to themselves and profit to the country as well.

I think the nation can spend its money no more judiciously and no more wisely than to survey every foot of public land in this country; and not only that, but expend every dollar which is essential to make and complete the irrigation survey in the arid lands of this country, so that in the establishment of a system of irrigation we may act with some degree of intelligence.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho will be adopted with the amendment which I have myself offered.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, some days ago I offered an amendment which I intended to propose to the pending bill. When the legislative, etc., appropriation bill was pending in the Senate on the 13th and 14th of July I made some remarks on the subject of surveys of lands in the States of the West, and I then submitted some tables which I have before me.

I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] for the reason that the people of the State of Washington have not been able to obtain surveys of the public lands to the extent necessary and desirable to promote settlement upon the lands in that State.

In looking over the tables to which I refer, I ascertain that there were 8,523,838 acres of public lands in the State of Washington, which were occupied in the year 1893, which were unsurveyed. That one fact paints the story better than any words can tell it; the fact that more than eight and a half million acres of public land were occupied by squatters who could get no title to the lands which they were occupying and cultivating, because it was not possible to procure surveys of those lands, is serious enough to arrest the attention of the Senate and of all right thinking people. I know it to be a fact that the people of my State have been waiting for years and hoping that Congress would make an appropriation which would enable settlers to take these lands and make homes in the best and proper sense, so that they would not be mere squatters on the public domain.

I do not see why the Congress of the United States should not provide the money to make the necessary surveys. Surely there can be no object in withholding the money for this purpose. It is proper that the lands of these new States should be rapidly settled. These great areas of fertile, cereal-producing plains are capable of raising in the State of Washington alone 200,000,000 bushels of wheat per annum. There is no doubt that, rapid as has been the growth of the State of Washington in the decade between 1880 and 1890, as reported by the census, during which time the population increased about 400 per cent, the population would have increased far more rapidly, and settlements would have taken place far more speedily on farms had it been possible to obtain good titles to land.

This is also true of woodland tracts. We have a great area covered by magnificent forests. Their survey is difficult. It is necessary to pay very high rates for surveying them, much higher than for the survey of land on the plains.

The people are desirous of obtaining timber lands for the purpose of manufacturing lumber. We have a very large lumber industry there, including enormous mills scattered all over the western part of the State. Within the past two or three years there has sprung up an immense industry in connection with the manufacture of cedar shingles. The manager of the Great Northern Railway Company, a transcontinental road, which was completed to Seattle within a year or two, has told me in a letter that his company were sending fifty carloads of cedar shingles to the East every day. This alone amounts to more than the commerce of the Kingdom of Greece in currants, which is their principal export industry. The people engaged in the manufacture of lumber want to obtain possession of tracts of timber; and it is right that they shall do so; and it is right that the surveys shall be made to give them title.

I trust I shall not offend the committee having this bill in charge if I urge upon them, in view of these plain facts, that the appropriation be increased to the sum of $400,000, as named in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Another thing, Mr. President, to which I desire to refer incidentally, is that many of the States in the West have had, relatively, large amounts of surveying done upon lands which are not occupied. Several of these States do not require money for surveys of the public lands to the extent that other States require this money, and there ought to be some better method for the distribution of this money. I had prepared an amendment to offer on this point, providing that the amount thus appropriated shall be distributed among the several States and Territories in proportion to the amount of occupied unsurveyed land in each State and Territory at the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

I think it is fair that such a provision shall be adopted; but after consultation with some Senators from the States of the West, who have intimated to me that while at the present time their people are not suffering so much as ours are from a lack of these surveys, yet it will not do for them to agree to this amendment, because it might be quoted against them in the future with reference to the coming in of immigrants who would ask for surveys, I shall not insist upon offering the amendment, but I trust the committee will see fit to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. The nation can not afford to be stingy and mean in assisting settlers to obtain homes for which the nation receives pay for the land, and taxes thereupon thereafter.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, we have to appeal every year to the Senate to give us money for public surveys. The House of Representatives will not, in the first instance, put into the appropriation bills the amount that is actually required in the settlement of a new country.

The money that is appropriated for public surveys is returned very quickly to the Government of the United States. I hold in my hand a letter from the acting chief of the division of accounts in the Interior Department, addressed to the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 12, 1894.

	300,000.00

Very respectfully,

JAS. B. MANKIN,
Acting Chief, Division of Accounts.

Hon. EDW. A. BOWERS,
Assistant Commissioner, General Land Office.

The Treasury report shows that during the same time the Government has sold public lands, out of which it has realized more than $50,000,000. The most of this money has come out of the pockets of poor people who have settled on the public lands in the West. It will be noted that there has been a net gain from these lands of over $48,000,000. I am one of those who believe that every time the Government sells or disposes of a piece of its land for any purpose, whether it be for settlement or for the purpose of building upon it town lots, or making improvements of any kind, the United States is greatly benefited. The people who purchase these lands pay taxes, and the people who settle upon the lands help to support the Government.

I feel that the Committee on Appropriations ought to give us a little more money than they have allowed. The committees of this body have usually been liberal, but the year before last they gave us only $200,000, which put our surveys very much behind. In the last sundry civil appropriation act there was $375,000 appropriated.

The Secretary of the Interior did not make as large an estimate as Western men believe he should have done, but he made an estimate of $400,000 for the fiscal year which has already commenced. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will allow us this amount. I think it is absolutely necessary in that Western country. It is but a small amount when you consider the large sum the Government receives each year from the sale and the disposition of these lands, very many of which are not really worth the amount for which they are sold by the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendments will not be agreed to, and I hope Senators will not insist upon their adoption. For the fiscal year 1885 we appropriated for these surveys $350,000; for the year 1886 we appropriated $300,000; for the year 1887 we appropriated $50,000; for the year 1888 we appropriated $50,000; for the year 1889 we appropriated $100,000; for the year 1890 we appropriated $200,000; for the year 1891 we appropriated $425,000; for the year 1892 we appropriated $400,000; for the year 1893, $375,000; and for the fiscal year 1894, $200,000.

The House of Representatives appropriated $175,000, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations report in favor of increasing the amount to $275,000, making an increase of $100,000. Had we done that only, and no more, the Senators might have some right to complain; but we have done more for the Western States in this bill in the legislation and other provisions which are contained in it than has ever been done in any one fiscal year, I care not what year it may have been, even when there was $425,000 appropriated.

Senators will see by the provision we have inserted on page 64 that we authorize the governors of the States to have lands surveyed, and they can have surveyed just as much land as they will advance the money to survey, whether it be $10,000 or $25,000 or $50,000 worth of land. All the governors are required to do is to designate the lands out of which they want to make selection of the lands granted to the States, and furnish the money for them to be surveyed, and the money will then be reimbursed to them by the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator why the governors of States should furnish money to survey United States Government lands?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because it is a physical impossibility for the United States in any one year to survey all the public lands in those States, a large portion of which are now wholly uninhabitable, and it would be an absolute waste of money to do so, as every man knows who has been in that section of the country. If we should irrigate those large arid plains, it would be impossible frequently to leave monuments that could be found ten or even five years afterwards.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish the Senator would explain it to me, an Eastern man. I can not see any reason, if Congress were now willing to expend two or three times as much money for surveying public lands this year as it did last year, why it can not be done. Why should we not go on and survey all the lands within the next two or three years?

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator knows nothing more about our Western lands than to think they can all be surveyed in one year, then I must decline to argue the question with him.

Mr. CHANDLER. But I have to vote on the question, and I ask for information of a man who knows all about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I want the Senator to tell me what is the objection to surveying the public lands two or three or four times as fast as they are now being surveyed? If he does not choose to tell me, and he says I know nothing about it, while he knows all about it, let him keep his knowledge to himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. The reason is that we had to appropriate $15,000 this morning for resurveying, because we could not find the monuments indicating the corners of the land that had been surveyed. There had not been people enough there to keep up the corners. Many portions of that country are in many respects wild country, which will have to be irrigated, and there is no water there for miles.

Mr. CHANDLER. Can not land be surveyed until you have an irrigating ditch?

Mr. COCKRELL. You can survey it if you will go to the expense.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why should you not?

Mr. COCKRELL. You might survey it by having iron posts so that you could put them 4 or 5 feet in the ground where they would remain. Then there would be no trouble about surveying the land and leaving the monuments marking the corners for anybody who wants to go there and settle.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then the reason we can not survey any faster is because we can not get posts to stay in the ground when we put them there? [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I am devoting myself to the question as to whether we ought to appropriate more than we have allowed in this bill. I say we have done more than has ever been done heretofore.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am trying to find out why we should not appropriate three or four or five times as much as we have done heretofore.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not satisfy the Senator from New Hampshire. I refer him to Infinite Wisdom to give him the information he seeks.

Mr. CHANDLER. Infinite Wisdom has very little to do with surveying these lands. He may survey this Senate, but He does not survey the lands of the West.

The Senator says he is arguing against the proposition to expend more money. I shall be compelled to vote against him unless he convinces me that I ought to vote the other way; and I do not see why he should not, from the full source of his abundant wisdom, try to enlighten me courteously, civilly, and fully, because I am an attentive auditor of his whenever he speaks.

Mr. COCKRELL. In answer to the Senators from Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, and Washington in regard to these appropriations, I simply repeat what I have said in regard to the amounts that have been appropriated, and say that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has this year made more liberal appropriations for surveys than have ever been made in any one year. We have increased the amount from $175,000 to $275,000. We have also inserted a provision in the bill authorizing the governors of States, in order that each State may have an opportunity to select the best lands within its domain—to satisfy the grants made by the Government of the United States to that State for school purposes and other purposes, as we all know—to select valuable lands, and not be compelled to wait until all the lands of those States are surveyed before they can make their selections.

In order that the States may be enabled to make their selections of public lands granted to them by the General Government, we have inserted a provision in the bill that the governors of any of these States, naming them, Washington, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wyoming, may apply to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, designating the lands they want surveyed. The lands are then reserved, and they are surveyed, the governors depositing the money necessary to pay for the surveys; and when the lands are surveyed the State makes its selection. It is not compelled to take more than one-fortieth of an entire section or even of a township; it can take what portion it pleases, and the amount the State pays for the survey is reimbursed by the United States. The States simply lose the interest upon the money advanced.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion in reference to this subject?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Most of the new States which have been admitted have in their constitutions a restriction so far as indebtedness is concerned. My State can not advance money for such a purpose. We have no right under our constitution to do so.

But there is another objection with many of the States. They have a limit on the indebtedness which the State may incur to 10 mills, or 1 per cent, on the assessed value of the property in the State. They have not the money to pay for these surveys. In other words, under this provision of the bill they must levy a tax in those States for the surveying of the land of the United States. I am glad the proposition is in this bill, and I hope the Senator will keep it in the bill.

If the settlers in a State were hard pressed, they might themselves advance the money to have the lands surveyed; but I think it is a pretty hard requirement on the new States. They do not own the land; they have no control over it; and I think the United States ought to advance the money.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator want that provision of the bill stricken out?

Mr. CAREY. No; I want it to stay in. Some good may come out of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed that Senators wanted the provision in the bill or it would not have been inserted; I supposed there was some necessity for it.

Mr. CAREY. It will do no harm. We do not expect to get as much money as we ought to get by this bill, but the Senator from Missouri has always been good to us in the West, and has been inclined to be liberal. We think that $400,000 is as little as we can get on with during the next fiscal year.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have stated what we have done in the way of making the appropriation of $275,000, an increase of $100,000 over the amount appropriated by the House of Representatives, and then we have inserted the provision in regard to the surveys at the instance of the States. In addition to that we have put into this bill a provision, on page 66, which reads:

> For the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and the selection therein of such lands as are granted therefor.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the provisions of that act we have in this bill appropriated the sum of $125,000, which was appropriated under a former act for the survey of those lands granted to the railroads, so that patents may be issued to them and the railroads may be compelled to pay taxes upon them to the States. We have made this amount a permanent fund; we have reappropriated it, and as fast as it is expended in the surveys, and the company reimburses the fund, it is usable again, so that we have practically put $125,000 to be reimbursed by the railroad companies as fast as the lands are surveyed.

The Senator knows well that it is a great advantage to those States to have the railroad lands surveyed. You may turn the money over twice a year, and make it the equivalent of $250,000 if you can have the surveys made. We thought we had dealt very liberally with the new States; we had no disposition to injure them in any way; we wanted to be just and generous and even liberal with them. Therefore we increased the amount from $175,000 to $275,000, an increase of $100,000, and we put in it the provision in regard to the governors of the States, so that the States might select their public lands and have them surveyed. Then we put in the provision reappropriating the $125,000, making it a permanent fund, to be utilized from time to time, and just as rapidly as the railroad lands can be surveyed and the railroads pay the cost of surveying, then that sum is immediately available for another survey.

Mr. CAREY. Before the Senator from Missouri sits down will he please tell me whether the last amount, $125,000, for the survey of land grants of railroads, is appropriated on an estimate of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. It is put in the bill in pursuance of an amendment of one of the Senators here. It is to reappropriate that sum. It was appropriated, as the Senator from Wyoming will see, by the act of March, 1887, to provide for the adjustment of land grants, etc.

Mr. DUBOIS. The needs of my State to have its lands surveyed are greater than those of any other State in the Union. As I said awhile ago, there are applications for surveys from settlers living on lands which would cost about $32,500. Of the $125,000 my State will get none, because we have no railroad land grants in it, except a very small strip on the Northern Pacific Railroad in the northern part of the State. The Oregon Short Line, a part of the Union Pacific, which runs through the entire length of my State, having a thousand or twelve hundred miles of railroad, has no land grant. Neither has the Utah and Northern. So, while that provision might benefit some of the States, it will not benefit my particular State.

Mr. SQUIRE. Before the Senator from Missouri sits down I wish to call his attention to one point, which I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate. I do not believe it is right for people to go on and occupy land in a State and not be able to get the land surveyed. I have before stated the area in the State of Washington which is occupied and unsurveyed. Now, let me state what is in the situation in other States. Montana has 6,794,197 acres. Idaho has 12,250,244 acres.

Mr. DUBOIS. Surveyed?

Mr. SQUIRE. This is unsurveyed, occupied land, according to the report of the Land Office. Oregon has 6,104,314 acres of occupied, unsurveyed land. Utah has 10,733,058, and Colorado has 792,396. All this land is occupied and unsurveyed.

Now, let me refer for a moment to the net receipts from the sale of public lands in the State of Washington. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1892, it was $45,525, and the apportionment made to Washington from the appropriation for public surveys for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, was $45,000, showing more received from public lands by $525 than was paid out. Take it for the next year. The total receipts from the sale of public lands in the State of Washington for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, was $31,583. The apportionment made to Washington from the appropriation for public surveys for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1894, was $24,000, balance $7,583, showing that amount more received from sale of public lands than was paid out for surveys therefor.

Where is the justice in this when you can see that the Government has received more money by more than 25 per cent than the amount paid out for public surveys? Why not let these people have their lands surveyed? The Government will get the money back rapidly and at a far faster rate than it is paid out for surveys.

Where is the "giving" so much bragged about by the Senator from Missouri? There is no "giving" at all. It is a good investment for the United States and the returns are immediate and in full with a contingent interest afterwards by reason of taxes.

I do not know how these arguments will apply to some other States. I simply state the case as it relates to the State of Washington. The figures are plain and nobody can combat them. I say as a matter of justice and decency the surveys ought to be made. There is no propriety in keeping back the money and preventing the land from being occupied and improved.

I append as a part of my remarks the following letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle:

> THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
> Seattle, Wash., June 29, 1894.
> DEAR SIR: By a recent letter from the surveyor-general of this State, W. P. Watson, the attention of this Chamber of Commerce has been called to the urgent need of increased appropriations for the survey of public lands in our State, and the chamber has been asked to render its aid in endeavoring to secure a sufficient appropriation.
>
> It is deemed hardly necessary to explain to you at length the condition of our lands and of our settlers, as it is felt that you are well advised on these points; but we take the liberty of asking your attention to the matter when it comes before the Senate for action, to the end that the meager share to which Washington may be entitled, under the item of $175,000 provided in the House bill for the entire United States, may be measurably increased, so that the settlers who have for years been living upon and cultivating lands in this State, remote from comforts and civilization of their fellows, may be enabled to prove up upon their lands and exercise all rights and privileges of ownership.
> It is assured that surveys have not been made ahead of the actual needs of the settlers in this State, as 39 per cent of its vacant lands are occupied by bona fide settlers, while 76 per cent of its surveyed lands are so occupied.
>
> Such care and discretion has been exercised in the survey of our public lands that in our State very little wild and unfit lands or mountains have been surveyed. An examination of the records as to the receipts from sale of public lands and disbursements on account of surveys will show a credit of several thousand dollars in favor of the State of Washington.
>
> The large number of bona fide settlers in the western ends of Jefferson and Clallam Counties clamor for surveys as precedent to opening up roads and the ability to seek railroad building and connections. Much land in the Grays Harbor region awaits only private ownership to be amply developed.
> The Piedmont country of Western Washington offers untold opportunities to present and intending settlers. Of the Okanogan and Stevens Counties, in Eastern Washington, is the necessity and demand for prompt survey true, as well as of many other sections of the State.

Feeling that the demands of these honorable and thrifty and courageous workers should be met with reasonable consideration from our Government, and further that the new lands be rendered easier of occupancy and cultivation by being surveyed, thereby aiding in relieving the "congested population" of many of our cities and adding so many more home-makers and wealth-producers to our body politic, the Chamber of Commerce of Seattle has instructed its president and secretary to respectfully ask your attention to this matter and your aid in securing a large increase in the appropriations mentioned.

Very respectfully, yours,

E. O. GRAVES, President.
WM. H. WHITTLESEY, Secretary.

Hon. W. C. SQUIRE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I have the warmest sympathy for the Senator from Missouri in charge of the bill, a warmth of sympathy which perhaps is increased by the intense heat in the Chamber this afternoon. I have a hearty admiration for the regard he has ever shown for Western interests, and I hope he will see his way, before we get through with this question, to meet the views of those who represent the new States and the far western portion of the continent. In the State of Nebraska there are no unsurveyed public lands, and yet as an old resident of that State I remember the deplorable condition which existed when there were lands that should be surveyed. Therefore, from that experience, I am in hearty accord with the Senators from the States west of Nebraska who are clamoring, and very properly clamoring, that the public lands within their borders shall be surveyed just as rapidly as a proper regard for the public expenditures will permit. I do not think the proposed increase to $400,000 for that purpose is too much.

Mr. President, I did not rise however, to address myself to that amendment so much as to the amendment proposed by my colleague. His suggestion is that the $400,000 which may be appropriated, or whatever sum may be appropriated, in addition to being used for surveys of public lands, shall also be used for an irrigation survey of the arid and semiarid lands in the United States. I do not understand that my colleague means a survey in the usual acceptation of the term as applied to public lands. It is that topographical survey and that report as to the surface of the ground, the capacity of its streams, the places for reservoirs, the places for the location of artesian wells, which will give to this now suffering country some relief.

In the semiarid lands of the West, attracted by the flaming advertisements of railroad companies that had land grants there, tempted by the propositions made by the Government of the United States, settlers have made their homes. They have been able to eke out in some years a very miserable existence. Tempted by the rains that come copiously in some years, they have hung on through years of following drought. This very spring there was enough of rainfall to tempt them to put their crops in the fields, and yet there has come a drought upon them which beggars description. Streams are dry which usually flow with water in a fairly wet season. The Platte River is almost a fit subject for irrigation. Both my colleague and I have received letters from our State which show a most deplorable condition.

As the people have been tempted upon those lands by the holding forth of these promises, it seems to me no more than fair that the Government should expend some money for their relief, especially as it will get it back a hundredfold, and far more, if those lands by irrigation can be made productive and there shall not be that uncertainty of a crop that is incident to reliance on rain. It will be to the great good of the entire country.

Early in the present session I introduced an amendment intended to be offered to the sundry civil bill, in which I proposed an appropriation for the purpose of gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and the boring, in arid and semiarid sections, of experimental artesian wells.

The amendment went by regular course of the Senate to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. There it sleeps to-day. I have been unable to submit it to the bill, because I knew that the point of order would be made upon it, because it had not received the consideration of that committee. I enter complaint here, in proper parliamentary language, against the committee for that which I think has been the neglect of a very important matter.

When I presented to the Senate the amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill which has received this complete ignoring, I produced a letter from a gentleman high in official position in this country, connected with the Geological Survey, who has given very great study and thought to the subject of the reclamation of the arid and semiarid lands. I beg leave to quote from it:

The investigations by the Geological Survey into the water resources of the country have been carried on in the past under the general appropriations, with the ultimate object of obtaining facts similar to those collected and published regarding the mineral resources.

That is what we want. The Government of the United States, for the purpose of advancing itself and enriching itself, has made large expenditures of money for the purpose of showing the mineral resources of the country. There is far more of wealth in the streams of this country, those on the surface and those under ground, in the productive power that they will give to the fertile soil, which simply needs water, than there is in all the mineral resources of the United States, and it is a more certain supply of wealth. And should we not, when we have spent money so lavishly for the purpose of developing the mineral resources, go into this enterprise and show where reservoirs can be established, make the surface lines and surveys which will show what streams can be used, and by experiment show where these underground currents are which, being tapped by the bored well, will bring forth the copious stream that will enrich the soil? It seems to me that we should. He goes on further:

The object of the Survey has been to study certain representative streams, ascertain the fluctuations of water supply, and at the same time obtain all facts accessible concerning the underground waters, their movements and availability for use.

And there is a very important consideration.

Thus the results are valuable, not only in all considerations of water power and municipal supply, but also in the questions of irrigation development, now so pressing in the West. That the work is generally appreciated is shown by the numerous inquiries constantly reaching the Survey regarding the possibilities of the development of efficient supplies of water from various streams or deep wells.

Some of these questions it is possible to answer, while to satisfactorily solve other problems will require thorough examination. Questions concerning the feasibility of attempts to secure artesian waters are particularly difficult, and at the same time are of great importance to persons or localities demanding a full knowledge of the facts. Petitions and requests are constantly being received that actual tests be undertaken in all parts of the country, especially upon the Great Plains, and while it may be questionable whether or not such tests should be undertaken by the Government, there can be no doubt but that this Survey should be in a position to determine whether there is reasonable probability of obtaining artesian water at different points.

The study of existing artesian conditions, made for the Census Office, demonstrated that thousands of failures could have been prevented and hundreds of thousands of dollars saved in experimental drillings had full information as to the probabilities been sought before the expenditures were made. On the other hand, it is highly probable that undiscovered artesian basins can be pointed out, or at least chances of success determined, before drillings are made. This, however, can only follow upon a thorough examination of the conditions which govern the occurrence and distribution of waters.

I do not think we are asking of the Congress of the United States anything that is unreasonable or unfair. I do not think we are asking much of those who live in a land flowing with milk and honey, the Eastern land, where the rain falls in its proper season, and where the conditions of life in many regards are far more pleasant than they are in the West, when we ask of them this sum out of the abundance of the country, for this is an abundant country. It is not in an impoverished condition. There is temporary difficulty in the Treasury by reason of conditions which I think we will remove when a different party gets at the helm of the ship of state. I think we will see a return of better conditions and an overflowing Treasury when by proper financial fiscal methods we shall put ourselves on the road to prosperity.

But this country is certainly able to give to the people of the West that expenditure which is needed to show where they can properly make their effort at irrigation. No men and no number of men combined can do it. It needs a surface survey of large tracts of land; it needs the taking of elevations; it needs exploration by these scientific men, and they are very few in number who are able, from the course of streams which, because of the nature of the soil go under the earth's surface and are carried along in a lower stratum that will hold water, to find where these underground currents are and where the artesian wells can properly be bored.

I do not expect the Government of the United States to go into the actual work of digging irrigation ditches and constructing reservoirs. That will be done by private parties as soon as the surveys are made which will show what can be accomplished by such ditches. I do not expect the Government of the United States to go into very great expenditure in the way of digging artesian wells, but it certainly could make experimental borings here and there throughout the West, in the State of Kansas, in the State of Nebraska, in the Dakotas, or in the States west of that territory, to show by such actual experiment that it is possible to get the water to spout out from under the earth to do great good to the soil.

Whatever may become of the amount, whether it shall remain at $275,000, which I think is not sufficient for the purpose, or whether it shall be more, I earnestly hope that the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. ALLEN] will be adopted and that it will not meet with any opposition from the committee. It is certainly in the right direction.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for only a moment. I notice that my friend, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], referred in somewhat severe terms to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, of which I have the honor to be chairman. He complained that his amendment had not been acted upon.

If the Senator from Nebraska had manifested a very small quantity of that enthusiasm which scintillated from him a little while ago, and had suggested to any member of the Irrigation Committee that he would like this particular amendment called up, I have no doubt it would have been called up, provided it would have been possible to have gotten the committee together. Certainly, the Senator should not proceed to annihilate, figuratively speaking, the committee merely because the amendment was not called up and acted upon. Indeed, he does not know but that perhaps the committee spent night after night and delighted itself during this charming weather in considering his amendment, and that it perhaps failed to report the amendment because it did not desire to report it adversely and thus wound the sensibilities of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. Did the committee do that?

Mr. WHITE. I say that the Senator from Nebraska does not know but that the committee did so, and he is estopped——

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from California does know, and I ask him for information.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Nebraska is not in a position to ask any questions about it. He has had the amendment carefully locked up in his desk for the purpose apparently of making an attack upon the most innocent of all committees of this body, and one which has not been able during the present session to furnish a great deal of water because of lack of funds, owing, as I think, to the action of the party to which the Senator belongs.

As to the matter which is really under consideration—because after the manner of epic poets, my friend digressed into a discussion of the aridity of the lands of the West—I understand it is in reference to an appropriation for the surveys of the public lands in the United States. I do not wish to extend the debate, but being pretty familiar with the requirements of a portion of the Western country I know it is the general opinion of those well informed that the estimate made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office is not excessive.

There are in the Senate two gentlemen who have been at the head of the Interior Department, and who know that the necessities for surveys can be appreciated only by those who come in actual contact with the business of the disposition of public lands. I myself know many instances where persons have been unable to transact business, to obtain money upon their property, or to do anything with it because of the fact that they have not been able to have their land surveyed in the possession of which they have been for a long time. For that reason I think the estimate made by the Commissioner ought to be adhered to.

I cordially indorse all that has been said in regard to the action of the Committee on Appropriations. They have been more generous this year than perhaps ever before. It shows that we are approximating a thorough knowledge of the subject. Therefore in what I have said there is no reflection at all upon them, because I appreciate what they have done; but I still think that the estimates made by the Land Office ought to be followed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri argued that more money than the amount which the committee has reported could not be wisely expended; that there is danger of waste in a too rapid survey of the public lands. There is no question here to-day as to any such waste of money by a too rapid survey. The motion is merely to increase the appropriation to the amount which is estimated for by the Interior Department. It would not be in order to move to appropriate a greater sum, and the question is why the $400,000 estimated for should not be appropriated.

I still venture to say that a liberal appropriation, as liberal an appropriation as estimated for, namely, $400,000, ought to be made for the survey of the public lands. I can not see why there is any objection to proceeding with the utmost possible speed in making those surveys. It would do no harm, in my judgment, with all due deference to the Senator from Missouri, to go on with the survey of lands which are not settled upon, and which are not likely to be settled upon for years to come. I can not understand why there is any objection to appropriating sufficient money to substantially survey all of the public domain now remaining undisposed of. That being my opinion, and it not having been changed by anything the Senator from Missouri has stated or refused to state, I shall vote for the motion to increase the appropriation to the sum of $400,000, as asked for by the Interior Department.

There is another consideration which influences me, and that is that I believe in these times it is wise to keep as many men in employment as can be profitably employed. It is the season of the unemployed, and instead of having the Government appropriations reduced and limited where there is work to be done, I should have those appropriations increased. I believe it would be a good time to dig certain coastwise canals and to put to work many of our unemployed citizens.

I quote, without enlarging upon this point, from the well-written words of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I have heretofore had occasion in the tariff debate to quote from the article on the Wilson bill by Hon. ROGER Q. MILLS, in the February (1894) number of the North American Review. I now read and place upon the record these words, which I commend to the careful consideration of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations:

> In the unhappy condition of our country to-day our statesmen—

And he includes the Senator from Missouri as one of our statesmen as well as himself—

> our statesmen should bend every energy of mind and muscle to find employment for every one of our idle workmen. Public works, wherever they are to be constructed, should be entered upon now, and the most liberal appropriations should be made for their continuance; instead of discharging one person from Government employ, two should be taken on. This course should be pursued by national, State, and local authorities.

I ask the Senator from Missouri if he is willing to take this principle, thus felicitously expressed, as a guide to conduct him in the preparation of appropriation bills? I know the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who I see in the Chamber behind the Senator from Missouri, is governed by that principle and is willing to accept the Senator from Texas, as he speaks in this article, as his guide; and I regret that the Senator from Missouri is not willing, as one opportunity of employing more men, of taking on more men instead of discharging men from Government employ, to make the small and reasonable appropriation, as I conceive it to be, which the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior ask for the surveys of the public lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to change my amendment, so as to insert after line 13, on page 61, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The SECRETARY. Insert after line 13, page 61:

> For the purpose of making an irrigation survey of the arid and semiarid lands of the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate at any particular length on this question, although it is a very important matter to a great many of the States of the Union. It is highly important, in my judgment, to ascertain the proper data by making an irrigation or topographical survey, whatever it may be called, of the arid and semiarid lands of the country, with a view of introducing there as soon as possible a system of successful irrigation.

I am not now prepared to say whether the Government should itself enter upon the introduction of irrigation, although I am frank to say that I can see no reason why it should not, for a great many years ago, I do not know but that it was in 1820, or possibly earlier, Congress appropriated a large sum of money for the construction of a national pike, running from this city, I think, to St. Louis, Mo.

The power of the Government to appropriate money for this or any other public purpose is unquestioned and unquestionable. That this Government has actual power to appropriate money to bring these arid and semiarid lands into a state of useful cultivation, no man in my judgment can for a moment deny. The only question then to be considered is, is it advisable, is it good policy, to start now and make a beginning in this respect, and to have the Secretary of the Interior gather up the necessary data from which a system of irrigation can be introduced successfully among such lands.

This is an important matter, Mr. President; more important than one would think at a casual glance. Our country is becoming congested in certain centers of population. Men are coming to this country annually by the thousands and by the hundreds of thousands, seeking homes and seeking employment. They are congregating in our cities, so that the question of municipal control has become an important question in this country to-day, and in my judgment our liberties are as much endangered by the congestion of an irregular population in our great cities as from any other cause. It is important in that view to open up the millions of acres of arid and semiarid land, so that the surplus population of our country may be induced to occupy these lands and to cultivate them with profit to themselves and with profit to the country.

Those who are not familiar with these lands and the people who have settled upon them can form no adequate idea of the condition of affairs in that part of the country to-day. There are certain seasons when upon these lands, or a great portion of them, crops can be cultivated with success, when there is sufficient rainfall for that purpose, and wheat, corn, and all of the products indigenous to the climate and soil can be produced in abundance. Then there comes a season, or perhaps two or three seasons in succession, when crops planted in the spring which bid fair to ripen into a bounteous harvest are absolutely and completely destroyed and a great portion of the population is driven from the lands back into the more thickly settled portion of the country.

The western part of my State is as rich a portion of the earth as there is in the United States when there is sufficient rainfall or when properly irrigated. It is a section of country that grows everything in ample abundance. I received but a few days ago a letter from a prominent gentleman in that portion of the State, stating that two thousand families had moved from one Congressional district in the northwestern portion of my State, and that they had gone East in consequence of the complete destruction of the crops there. I received but yesterday a letter from the judge of the district court at my own home, who said to me that, going through my town and going east from the western portion of the State and from a portion of Wyoming, there were daily wagons by the dozen carrying drought-ridden families to the eastern portion of this country for sustenance.

This condition is not peculiar to the western portion of Nebraska. It is found in Wyoming; it is found in all that portion of the country formerly known as the Great American Desert. Families by the thousands are traveling East, where the crops have not been a failure, for the purpose of obtaining subsistence during the winter.

Under such circumstances what policy should be pursued? Should we not begin now, without any unnecessary delay, and gather together the necessary data for the purpose of introducing a system of successful irrigation in that portion of our country? It will not do for the Committee on Appropriations to say that they have recommended the appropriation of all the moneys that can be appropriated at this time. One hundred thousand dollars is nothing as compared with the riches to be added by the opening up of that great portion of our country. The people who have located their homes there are entitled to this consideration. All of these lands, with the proper moisture, are of excellent producing quality. The people of this country who are seeking homes upon these public lands are entitled to this consideration, and they are entitled to it at once.

As I said a moment ago, the introduction of a successful system of irrigation of these lands will go very far toward determining the question of the surplus population of the United States. It will furnish people an opportunity to leave the overcrowded cities and villages. It will give them an opportunity to go upon these lands and occupy them and build homes, and to do so successfully.

I hope that the committee having in charge the pending appropriation bill will see the propriety and necessity of starting now upon this subject and gathering the necessary data for the introduction of a successful system of irrigation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska proposes to appropriate $100,000 for a survey looking to irrigation. Another amendment or suggestion I heard made on the floor was for an appropriation to bore artesian wells in different localities to find water and bring it to the surface. Before I enter upon this broad field I would be glad to have information that I will not now ask for, but I will procure it before the next session, as to about the annual income from the sale of public lands and the expense of administering the laws in respect to the public lands.

I am strongly inclined to the opinion that it costs this Government more to administer the laws and regulations in respect to the public lands than the Government ever derives from their sale. If that be true, or approximately the case, I should be glad to donate, to give absolutely to the States in which they may lie, the public lands of the Government, and let them administer them and irrigate them and cultivate them and utilize them in any way their wisdom and their own interests may suggest.

Mr. MANDERSON. We would be very glad to accept them.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to investigate that matter, but at present I shall not vote for any one of the amendments which are suggested with a view that the Government shall expend $100,000 for this survey, or any sum for boring artesian wells to find out where water can be brought to the surface, or any sum for the purpose of establishing dams and reservoirs to store water, that it may be doled out when it may be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 2, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 1, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. W. E. PARSON, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a bill (H. R. 7071) to exempt the property of the Young Men's Christian Association of the District of Columbia from taxation, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That all property belonging to the Young Men's Christian Association in the District of Columbia, used and occupied by that association, shall, so long as the same is so owned and occupied, be exempt from taxation, national and municipal: Provided, That where ground of said association is larger than is reasonably required for its use, or is not actually used for the legitimate purposes of said association, or if said ground or buildings shall be used for private gain, such portion of said ground or buildings as shall not actually be used for the purposes of said association, or from which it derives a rent or income, such portion of the same, or a sum equal in value to such portion, shall be taxed against such association."

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the object of the Senate amendment is simply to make more explicit the point that in case any part of the property of the Young Men's Christian Association referred to in the bill should thereafter become a source of gain, from rents or otherwise, or should in any way be used for the profit of the association, or for other purposes than those connected with the legitimate business of the association, it shall then pay taxes. That is all there is to the amendment, and I move that the House concur.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEARD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was concurred in was laid on the table.

WASHINGTON AND GREAT FALLS ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 6777) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and Great Falls Electric Railway Company," with amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, the modifications made in the House bill are very material, and I therefore move that the House nonconcur and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House, Mr. HEARD, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, and Mr. POST.

AUGUSTUS C. CARY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1948) granting a pension to Augustus C. Cary.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill lie on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1471) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of the American Transportation Company for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, in the State of Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine and adjust the claim of the American Transportation Company against the Government of the United States for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, in the State of Ohio, under a contract between said American Transportation Company and the United States, and determine what amount of dredging was done thereunder, the amount paid on account thereof, and the balance remaining unpaid, which balance he shall certify to the proper accounting officers for payment in the manner prescribed by law; and for the payment of said claim the sum of $5,434.18, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SAYERS. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio to explain the bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will make a brief explanation. The contract for the dredging of 65,000 cubic yards of material inside the harbor at Fairport was let to the claimant in this case. By reason of obstructions on the outside of the bar, and by reason also of a great strike, which we all heard of, which happened among the labor organizations at that time, the work was not completed.

It was not contemplated, however, that it should be completed within the period covered by the contract, and two short extensions were given by the Engineer Department of their own motion. Finally a third extension of thirty days was asked for by the contractors, they simply sending in the consent of the bondsmen, supposing that was all that was necessary, but to their surprise Maj. Overman, then in charge of the work, canceled the contract.

Thereupon the unfinished portion of the work was relet and was bid in in the individual name of one of the contractors, and was completed within the limit of expenditure fixed by the original contract.

Mr. SAYERS. Then I understand the gentleman to state that the original parties did in fact complete this work, although they completed it under a new name?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; under a new name, because of the actual cancellation of the original contract.

Mr. SAYERS. And I understand the gentleman to say also that the parties for whom relief is sought here were never paid?

Mr. GROSVENOR. They were never paid the 10 per cent reserved, or that portion of the money which came within the month at the close of their contract.

Mr. SAYERS. And the Government, I understand, has suffered no loss by the failure of the original contractors?

Mr. GROSVENOR. None whatever; and the recommendation here is that the Government shall pay simply what they would have paid under the original contract.

Mr. SAYERS. Another question: Does the gentleman know whether there are funds sufficient to the credit of this work to meet this payment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that question because I observe that the bill carries an appropriation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a balance to the credit of that fund in the hands of the War Department under the river and harbor act, under which the contract was let. I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I think I can explain in a minute to the gentleman from Texas and to everybody else how this matter stands. This harbor was one of those where continual work was required during the boating season to keep the channel open. By the original contract the work was to run until the 1st of July, but the engineer in charge agreed with the contractors that instead of doing all the work and expending all the money by the 1st of July, and then leaving the harbor to fill up so that navigation could not go on, it would be better to do the work gradually, stretching it out over the whole of the boating season.

Through some informality, however, when about three-fourths of the work was completed, the contract was annulled. Then the superintendent of this company was allowed to finish the work in his own name, and he went on and did finish it. There is this further fact which ought to be known to the House, that the company were doing this work at the actual cost of it, if not a little below cost, for the benefit of navigation and transportation, so that they never have made a cent out of it. And it was merely a misunderstanding between the Government officers there as to their authority in the premises.

Mr. BURROWS. I see this is a Senate bill. I wish to ask whether it has been considered by the House committee?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It has been considered by the Committee on Claims of this House and reported favorably; and a bill precisely like it is now pending in the House.

Mr. BURROWS. All right.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not object to the passage of the bill. The question which suggested itself to me was whether we might not be making a double appropriation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think not. This is simply an appropriation of the money on hand for this purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The matter has been carefully looked into by the committee.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN C. HOWE, DECEASED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1154) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased.

Mr. EVERETT. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. SAYERS. I object to the present consideration of the bill. Let it go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVERETT. If the gentleman will allow me to make a statement before he presses his objection——

Mr. JONES. I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill. It has been understood that to-day was to be given to the consideration of the election case of Moore vs. Funston.

The bill was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were respectively read twice, and referred as stated:

A bill (S. 2131) to secure uniformity in the names of minor streets of the cities of Washington and Georgetown—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 463) to reimburse the State of Nebraska for expenses incurred by that State in repelling a threatened invasion and raid by the Sioux in 1890 and 1891—to the Committee on Claims.

REPRINT OF BILL AND REPORT.

On motion of Mr. REILLY, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that House bill No. 7798 and report No. 1290 be reprinted, the previous print having been exhausted.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH submitted the following conference report:

R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6720) entitled "An act providing for the resurvey of Grant and Hooker Counties, in the State of Nebraska," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out the following language: "And that the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as is necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" and that the Senate agree to the same.

G. D. MEIKLEJOHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

FRED T. DUBOIS,
W. V. ALLEN,
S. PASCO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement of the House conferees was read:

The effect of the Senate amendment as now amended by the conference report will be to preserve and protect the bona fide claim of any actual occupant of any of the lands to be resurveyed and to eliminate the appropriation of $15,000 proposed by the Senate. The bill as thus amended is substantially as it passed the House.

THO. C. McRAE,
O. M. HALL,
G. D. MEIKLEJOHN.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HENRY JAMES.

Mr. McRAE submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2695) for the relief of Henry

James residing in the original Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Include in the part proposed to be stricken out by the amendment of the Senate all down to the end of the bill and insert in lieu of the part proposed to be inserted the words "nine hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

T. C. McRAE,
J. W. MOON,
Managers on the part of the House.
J. H. BERRY,
S. PASCO,
J. W. DOLPH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The following statement of the House conferees was read:

This bill as it passed the House authorized the sale of the lot therein described to Henry James for the sum of $1,200, the appraised value as shown by the last appraisement in 1891. The Senate amendment reduced the price to $600, the alleged value at the time Mr. James claims to have offered to purchase. The amendment agreed upon and now submitted by this report fixes the price at $900.

THO. C. McRAE.
J. W. MOON.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED ELECTION—MOORE VS. FUNSTON.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the report of the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Moore vs. Funston from the Second district of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Edward H. Funston was not elected and is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Fifty-third Congress as Representative from the Second district of Kansas.

Resolved, That H. L. Moore was duly elected and is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives as the Representative from the Second district of Kansas in the Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, there has been some conference between the majority members of the Elections Committee and some members representing the minority, as to the time which would be desired for debate in this case. An agreement has been reached by which each side, as I understand it, is to have two hours, and that a vote upon the case shall be taken this afternoon at the conclusion of that time.

I would like to hear the views of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL], as to the proposed arrangement.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand from gentlemen on this side that that arrangement will be satisfactory.

Mr. McCALL. It will be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that in the same connection an agreement be made as to the control of the time. If there be no objection, the debate upon this case will be limited to four hours, two hours on each side, the two hours in support of the committee report to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], and the two hours in opposition to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the record in this case is an exceedingly voluminous one. It covers something like 1,700 pages of very closely printed matter. The questions in dispute are also very numerous, involving many intricate propositions of law as well as of fact, and therefore it is entirely impossible that a case of its magnitude and importance could be fully discussed in all of its various details in the time allotted for its consideration.

I shall not even attempt, Mr. Speaker, to go into many of the details of the case in the remarks I now propose to submit. It would be impossible for me to do so. I shall confine myself, therefore, to what I regard as the important and salient points of the case, and I shall devote most of my time to an examination and discussion of the methods employed by the managers of the Republican party in Kansas City, Kans., which is located in Wyandotte County.

This contest comes from the Second Congressional district of the State of Kansas. The returns upon their face show that E. H. Funston, the contestee, received 22,898 votes; that H. L. Moore, the contestant, received 22,817 votes, and D. W. Huston 696 votes, giving an apparent plurality of 81 to the contestee, the sitting member.

The first question which is involved and which presents itself to the consideration of the House is a question of law. It is claimed by the contestee that the notice served upon him by the contestant is not sufficiently broad and comprehensive to cover all the points in dispute, concerning which evidence has been taken. It is claimed, on the other hand, by the contestant that the answer or countercharge, a copy of which is required to be served upon the contestant, was not served within the period prescribed by law.

The law requires that the notice of contest shall be served within thirty days after the determination of the result of the election by the officer or board of canvassers authorized by law to determine the same. It also provides that a copy of the answer shall be served upon the contestant within thirty days after service of notice of contest. In this case there is no question or dispute as to the time within which the notice of contest was served. It was served within the time specified. A true copy of the notice was left with the wife of the contestee on the 26th day of December, 1892, at his residence in Allen County, Kans. Personal service was had on contestee on the 26th day of December in the city of Washington.

Mr. FUNSTON. On the 28th.

Mr. JONES. On the 28th, I should have said.

A copy of the answer to the notice of contest was delivered to the wife of the contestant at his home in Lawrence, Douglass County, in the State of Kansas, on the 27th day of January, and personal service was had on the contestant on the 28th day of January. It is not necessary, therefore, for this House to decide whether personal service of the notice of contest or of the answer is necessary, as it is obvious that the answer was not served within the thirty days prescribed by statute, whatever may be the correct rule as to the manner of service.

If service by delivering a copy at the residence is good, then the contestee is in default, because the notice in that event was served December 26, 1892, and the answer January 27, 1893, making just thirty-two days. If personal service is required, the contestee is still in default, because personal service of the notice of contest was had on him December 28, 1892, and no personal service of his answer was had until January 28, 1893, the period intervening being thirty-one days. In any event, therefore, the answer was not served within the period prescribed by the act of Congress.

The Committee on Elections was unable to discover in what manner the parties have been prejudiced, either by the default of the contestee or by the narrow scope of the notice of contest. The notice is sufficiently definite and explicit to cover all the main questions in issue, and the contestee has in no instance been taken by surprise or deprived of an opportunity to meet the evidence produced by the contestant. The Committee on Elections believed it to be right to disregard technicalities not affecting in any respect the substantial rights of the parties and to decide the case upon its merits.

Had we applied to the notice of contest the rule of pleading upon which the contestee insists and to the answer the plain requirements ot the law, the contestee would have been without any answer and entirely out of court.

The chief interest in this case centers around two of the nine counties which compose the Second Congressional district of Kansas, namely, the counties of Wyandotte and Allen.

In the County of Wyandotte, in which Kansas City, Kans., is situated, there was a serious breach in the Republican party. One of the candidates upon the regular Republican ticket was exceedingly obnoxious to a large element of the Republican party in that city. Mr. Buchan, the regular Republican candidate for the State senate, was so objectionable to an influential element of Republicans in Kansas City, that they broke into open revolt and undertook to run a separate and independent ticket, known as the anti-Buchan Republican ticket.

Early in the campaign rumors were in circulation in Kansas City to the effect that there was a well-defined plan and conspiracy on the part of the Republicans to elect the Republican ticket and defeat the Democratic ticket by registering illegal and fictitious voters by the wholesale. The chairman of the Democratic committee, having learned that fact, appointed gentlemen in whom he had confidence to make a house-to-house canvass of certain precincts in Kansas City, and Mr. Keplinger, the president of the Anti-Buchan Republican Club, also took vigorous steps to uncover the frauds which it was proposed to perpetrate upon the voters of Wyandotte County. As a result of the investigation thus set on foot by the managers of the Democratic party and the independent Republican organization it was made manifest that 1,991 votes were illegally registered in Kansas City by the heelers of the Republican party for the purpose of overthrowing the will of the people.

Mr. McCALL. I should like to ask the gentleman whether it is in evidence that those votes were illegally registered in the interest of the Republican party?

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman upon that subject that when I get through with my statement I think it will be very evident to everybody who hears me that those registrations were made in the interest of the Republican party. The evidence is naturally circumstantial to a considerable extent, but it is so clear and so convincing in its character that no disinterested man, in my judgment, can come to any other conclusion than that it was done by the managers of the Republican party, and in the interest of the candidates upon the Republican ticket.

As I have already said, this investigation was instituted by the managers of the Democratic party and those of the independent Republican organization, and the result was that they became convinced that unless prompt and vigorous measures were taken the election would be nothing less than a hollow mockery. The president of the Anti-Buchan Club, himself a Republican, testified that he became convinced from evidence he could not question that the attempt was made by the managers of the regular Republican party to register at least 1,000 fraudulent votes; and James F. Getty, an intelligent lawyer, a Republican, and an unwilling witness, testified that in his own precinct, which was a residence precint, there were at least seventy of these fraudulent registrations.

Mr. Speaker, after the election was over the Democratic managers appointed gentlemen who had lived in these precincts for a great many years, some of them for twenty years, to go from house to house for the purpose of ascertaining if possible whether or not persons suspected of illegal registration and illegal voting actually resided where they registered from, or whether indeed such persons had any actual existence. These pollers have testified in this case, and it is objected by the contestee that much of their testimony is hearsay and that it was therefore not properly admissible.

It is true that they testify, in a number of instances, that they derived their information from the owners and proprietors of the houses where they inquired. They were told by the occupants of the houses that no such persons as those inquired of lived there, or had ever lived there. The Committee on Elections did not base their conclusions upon this testimony. There is in the record abundant evidence, the competency of which can not be questioned, to convince the most skeptical that a large number of persons voted upon false registration certificates; that they were registered from places that had no existence.

Some of them were registered from vacant lots, some from churches, and others were in the penitentiary, where they were supposed to have registered and voted. But whilst the committee has not taken into account the testimony which I have referred to as having been objected to as hearsay, and it is not at all necessary to do so, there are circumstances under which it would be entirely competent testimony, and it would be doing no violence to any rule of evidence, to admit it in this case. On this subject I will read from McCrary on Elections, section 356. I read:

> For the purpose of showing that nonresidents have voted, witnesses are often called to testify that persons whose names appear upon the roll as having voted are not known to them as residents of the county or voting precinct, as the case may be. This kind of evidence is admissible for what it is worth, but it is manifest that its value must depend upon circumstances. If the district or territory within which the voter must reside is large or very populous and the witness has not an intimate or extensive acquaintance with the inhabitants, the evidence will be of little value, and standing alone will avail nothing.
> But, on the other hand, if such district or territory is not large or populous, and if the witness shows that his acquaintance with the inhabitants is such that he could scarcely fail to know any person who may have resided therein long enough to become a voter, his evidence may be quite satisfactory, especially if it further appears that soon after the election the alleged nonresident voter could not be found in the district, within the limits of which all voters must reside. Proof of this character must at least be regarded sufficient to shift the burden upon the party claiming that the vote of such alleged nonresident be counted and require him to show affirmatively that he is a bona fide resident.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question, for information?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. As I understand, this objection on the part of the contestee is raised to testimony of this character, going to show that people had voted who had been improperly or fraudulently registered.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. How many votes were thrown out, if any, by the committee, upon that ground?

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that it is almost impossible for me to answer that question, owing to the character of the testimony. The committee were well satisfied that there were a large number of false registrations, and that a great many illegal votes were cast by repeaters and others not entitled to vote. How many, no mortal man will ever be able accurately to say. There is absolute proof as to 68 illegal votes, and the strongest circumstantial evidence as to many more.

If the rule of evidence laid down by McCrary is to be followed, then there were at least 128 fraudulent votes cast for the contestee in Wyandotte County. If we count only the 68, the 81 plurality returned for the contestee is well-nigh wiped out by these clearly-proven fraudulent votes.

But, Mr. Speaker, the contestant did not relax his efforts to find these people whose names appeared upon the registration books, and who the poll books showed had actually been voted, when the pollers reported that they could not find one of them. He had subpœnas issued for every one of the various voters whose legality or existence was questioned. He used the means the law placed at his disposal in order to bring them before an officer and have their testimony taken.

In every single instance the officer returned that no such person could be found. Every one of them, if they ever had any existence, had misteriously disappeared. The contestee did not attempt to produce them. No reasonable man can escape the conclusion that he could not have done so.

When the Democratic managers learned of the false registration of which I have spoken they concluded to place challengers at the various polling places to frustrate, if possible, fraudulent voting. At the Third precinct in Kansas City they placed a man named J. J. Rooney, and furnished him with a list of over 300 people who were found not to have been properly registered or to have had no existence whatever.

Mr. BOATNER. Did the election list show they voted?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; the election list showed that many of them voted, as we contend. I shall attempt to show by the strongest circumstantial evidence that they not only voted, but that they voted the Republican ticket, or that repeaters voted that ticket in their names. At the polling place in this third precinct Rooney was stationed with the list which I have described, and when the suspected men came up to vote he challenged their votes. The law of Kansas requires that when a voter's right to vote is challenged the judge of election shall place on his ballot the number corresponding with his name on the poll book, and that the word "sworn" shall be written after his name on the book.

When this law is not complied with there is no means of discovering for whom a challenged voter has cast his ballot. Every time that the judges observed that plain requirement of the law and the ballot was afterwards identified, it was found to be a Republican ticket. In a great many instances the judges of election, the Republican judges of election, for let me remark right here that the election machinery in this county was all in the hand of the Republican party——

Mr. DANIELS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. DANIELS. Does not the sworn testimony show that Mr. Craddock was a Democrat in the third district?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir. Mr. Craddock, one of the judges at the third precinct, stated that he was a Democrat. I am speaking generally. There may have been one or more exceptions. This was possibly the result of a resignation or a removal. But almost without exception the naturalization, registration, and election machinery was in the hands of the friends of Mr. Funston.

At any rate the judge who received the ballots at the third precinct, and to whom the challenges were made, was a Republican; and in most instances he refused to recognize the challenge, saying to the challenger, "I know that man; he is all right," and then put the ballot in the box. It is in evidence that when he thus disregarded challenges he did not in some cases know the man's name, and could not read it when it was shown him.

The voters were Poles and Hungarians, who were working for the Armour Packing Company, men who could not read a word of the English language, who could not speak a word of the English language, and who could not understand a word of it when it was spoken. Yet this Republican judge, in the face of these facts, and over the protest of Democratic challengers, simply said to them, "I know that man; he is all right;" and put the ballot in the box. The law was not observed and it was therefore impossible for the Democrats to prove other than by the strongest circumstantial evidence for whom these men voted. Does any gentleman on this floor doubt for whom they voted? They were brought in herds to the polls by Republican bosses, and Republican officers refused to provide the only and the legal means of identifying their ballots.

Mr. IKIRT. How many of such men were there?

Mr. JONES. The challenger states that in this precinct there were at least 40 or 50, and two judges of election corroborate his statements throughout.

Now, I want to mention right here, for fear I may forget it, because this third precinct plays a most important part in this contest, that when the polls were opened a man named Mark Cromwell, a Republican in the employ of the Republican committee, came to the precinct, and in face of the law which provides that three and only three judges of election shall hold an election, forced himself upon the election board and sat as one of the judges throughout that day.

It is in evidence, and that evidence is uncontradicted, that Cromwell is a sleight-of-hand performer and an all-round juggler. He also passes under different names. This Republican juggler not only received ballots, but when those ballots were counted on the next morning he took them out of the box and called off the names to the man who kept the tally. More than this, it is in evidence that at this precinct one of the Republican clerks became so intoxicated that he had to be removed and another man put in his place who was not sworn and was not in any way authorized to act.

Gentlemen will see how important these matters are when I come to speak of another feature of this case. When the depositions in this case were being taken, some time in February, 1893, the clerk of the county court of Wyandotte County, a Republican, who by law is the custodian of the ballots, was placed upon the witness stand. He was asked to produce the ballots that were voted at this third precinct. He said he did not have them with him, but that he would produce them. Afterwards he came before the notary who was taking the depositions and said that he was unable to find those particular ballots.

Subsequently he testified to this remarkable story: He said that on that morning, before he had eaten his breakfast, a Republican neighbor named Carpenter came to his house and delivered to him a package, which was addressed to him in a scrawling or disguised hand, saying he had found it on that morning on his gate-post. The package was torn open on one side, and ballots were protruding therefrom. The clerk said that in his opinion those were the missing ballots.

One of the judges of election at this precinct testified that he saw at least thirty or forty scratched tickets in the box when the tickets were being counted by the Republican sleight-of-hand performer, as I have described, and another testified that in his opinion there were not less than forty or fifty.

Now, when this package of mutilated ballots, which was not found it would seem until three months after the election, and then found on top of a man's gate in the town where the clerk resided—when this package was found, its was discovered that there were only five or six scratched ballots in it.

Mr. MCCALL. Let me ask the gentleman whether those ballots that were found did not exactly agree with the count made by the election judges at the time of the election?

Mr. JONES. That is true enough, but the gentleman must remember that a Republican juggler and sleight-of-hand performer, who forced himself upon the election board and then acted as a judge, had the best of opportunities to manipulate those ballots. He read off many of the ballots, and how easy it was for such a man to read straight tickets for scratched ones. When a recount was asked for months afterward, it became very necessary to put straight tickets in the place of the scratched ones. Mr. Mark Cromwell was no longer to be permitted to do the calling off. Hence we are introduced to these gate-post ballots.

Mr. BOATNER. Where had the ballots been in the meantime?

Mr. JONES. They were delivered by Mr. Craddock, the Democratic judge, to the clerk of the county, who was by law the proper custodian of them. The clerk says that he does not remember their delivery, though he does not deny that they were delivered, and he does admit that if the poll books had been delivered without the ballots he thinks he would have noticed the omission. He merely says he is utterly unable to account for the disappearance of the ballots, if they were ever in his office. We can only conjecture how they got out of the office.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman says, however, that the ballots were not found in the custody of the clerk, where they belonged?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is what I said. I fear the gentleman from Louisiana did not hear my statement. The clerk of the court was put upon the stand in February, 1893, and asked where those ballots were. He said at first they were in his custody in the clerk's office and that he would produce them the next day. When the next day came he was unable to produce them, but afterwards he came before the notary public taking the depositions and stated that to his great surprise a neighbor of his, a Republican, had brought the ballots to him in a mutilated condition, with one side of the package containing them torn open. This neighbor said, it seems, that he found them early that morning on the top of his gate. It was found upon investigation that there was one ballot in the package with Mr. Moore's name stricken off and Mr. Funston's put on. There were three ballots with Mr. Funston's name stricken off and Mr. Moore's inserted. There were one or two where both were scratched and no name inserted. With these exceptions, the gate-post ballots were all straight. They were made straight to fit the count. At this precinct Mr. Moore received 335 and Mr. Funston 310 votes, according to the count.

The gentleman who was running on the Republican ticket for Congressman-at-Large received, I think, 314 votes and the Republican Presidential electors 312 votes; so that Mr. Funston fell only from 2 to 4 votes below the vote given his party.

And just upon that point, since my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has interrupted me, I wish to read just here a line or two from a report which he himself made and which would seem to have some bearing on the point which he desires to make. His report bears out my contention that Funston ran far behind his party associates and that the few scratched ballots found in the gate-post package do not begin to represent the full extent of the scratching done at the third precinct.

Mr. Funston was not popular and no special work was being done for him individually at the third precinct. On the contrary, Moore was admittedly running ahead of his ticket. The judges who testified as to the large number of scratched ballots could not have been so greatly mistaken. But, as I have said, the views of the minority strengthen my position.

My friend says in this minority report:

> The energies of the Republican party were expended chiefly in the election of senator. There were the regular organization, with its committee, and the anti-Buchan organization. The two branches of the Republican party were engaged in fighting and watching each other. The evidence shows that one wing of the party was coöperating with the Democratic party. Two of the principal witnesses of the contestant, Geddy and Keplinger, were members of the anti-Buchan club. The polls were watched by representatives of all parties and factions, and, in addition, Federal supervisors were appointed. Mr. Funston's cause sunk into insignificance on account of the great division in his party in regard to the election of the State senator, and there was a good deal of indifference as to his fate, while his Democratic antagonist was left to pursue his plans unchecked.

The minority admit that there was the greatest indifference manifested at this precinct in regard to the fate of Mr. Funston; and yet the ballots, the gate-post ballots as they have been described, would show that Mr. Funston ran within two votes of the Republican electors. They are entitled to absolutely no weight. The evidence is clear that when the ballots were counted the contestant was grievously cheated by somebody.

Now, I want to read to the House a bit of interesting Republican testimony showing the way the Poles and Hungarians, who were voted for Funston, were registered. Whilst there is a provision in the constitution of Kansas which excludes from voting every ex-Confederate soldier, the law is so liberal toward foreigners—Poles and Hungarians—that one of that class has only to reside in the State six months, in the precinct thirty days, and to have declared his intention of becoming a citizen to be entitled to exercise the right of suffrage.

Mr. Getty, an intelligent Republican, of whom I have before spoken, thus graphically describes the manner in which ignorant foreigners were transformed into American citizens and made good Republican voters. Here is his very language:

> Of my own personal knowledge I know this: That there were a very large number of persons taken to the office of the clerk of the district court and were there given their first papers, which entitled them to vote at that election; improperly in this, that men were taken there who were unable to speak, read, or understand the English language, who signed the books containing the oath without knowing the contents of it, without making any statement of the time that they had lived in the State or county, and without having any interpreter present to interpret to them questions to them by the deputy clerk of court, or to interpret the oath or statements to them; that after they had signed the book containing the oath or declaration, that they were then led from that office to the office of the register of the commissioner of elections by subforemen, foremen, or employés of the Armour Packing Company, and presumably registered and given certificates of registration.
> I say presumably because I saw numbers of those men taken to that latter office by these foremen and saw them come out of that office, in many instances, with paper in their hands that I know from the shape and color of the paper were registry certificates.
> I know in one particular instance of three men being brought into the office of the clerk of the district court who were unable to speak a single word, or understand a single word, or read a single word of the English language. They were led by a foreman or employé of the Armour Packing Company; that there was no one present at that time who could even make them, by the use of language, understand that they should hold up their right hand, or sign the book or the affidavit; that the fact they should hold up their right hand was communicated to them by a sign from the foreman who brought them in there; that the fact that they must sign the affidavit was communicated to them by the foreman taking the pen, dipping it in the ink, putting it in their hand, taking hold of the hand containing the pen, drawing it over to the book, indicating a blank line, and motioning for the person to write there; that to those three men the contents of the oath and declaration was not interpreted, but was simply read off in English, and I remarked at that time to the clerk that those men didn't know what they were doing; that is, the deputy clerk, who was present, and he answered that he knew they didn't, and that there was a very large number coming in there daily and getting their first papers who were in the same condition. I think I can give the names of the three individuals I refer to.

The clerk of the United States district court was also examined as to the manner in which these foreigners made their declarations to become citizens. He was asked:

> Q. And you issued these papers to anyone who applied, I suppose, and everyone?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. You made no explanation to them as to what these papers signified, or no one else did, to your knowledge, did you?
> A. No, sir.
> Q. As to whether these people could read or understand the language, you did not know?
> A. No, sir.
> Q. I suppose a large portion of these people to whom first papers were issued put in their appearance to obtain their papers only a short time before the election, did they not?
> A. Yes, sir. (Record, pages 1096, 1097.)

That is the testimony of the clerk of the United States district court. Of course he was a Republican.

Mr. DANIELS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether Mr. Towner, the clerk of the district court, did not, in speaking of a large number of those persons, give this evidence:

> Q. Was this August Anderson in your office during the month of November, 1892?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. What nationality is he and what tongue does he speak?
> A. Swede; speaks the Swedish language.
> Q. How long has he been there as deputy clerk?
> A. I think he came in September, 1892. I may be mistaken; he might have come a little later.
> Q. I will ask you if you have any knowledge with reference to persons applying for and taking out their naturalization papers under the hand and seal of your court?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. State how this was done. I mean by that, state when these persons applied for naturalization papers what was said or done by you or your deputy?
> A. Made out their papers.
> Q. In cases where they were foreigners and spoke a tongue or language which you are not familiar with, whether or not a person who could speak their tongue accompanied them to the office of the clerk of the district court as their interpreter?
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. I will ask you if one of their countrymen, or a person who spoke their language, did not accompany them to your office when they took out their papers?
> A. Yes, sir.

I ask the gentleman whether that evidence was not given by the clerk of the district court?

Mr. JONES. Of course that testimony is in the record; the gentleman has read it from the record. It was hardly necessary for my friend to ask me if what he has just read is not in the record, and to take up my time in reading it. That testimony is in the record. I have not attempted to read all the witness said. He was a most unwilling witness for the contestant. He made the best showing he could for himself and his party. He prostituted his office to assist his party, and yet his admissions, as I have read them, prove that the foreigners who took out their first papers in his office were in absolute ignorance as to what they were being required to do. The passage read by me establishes this.

If I were to occupy the entire time from now until the close of this session I could not read all the testimony in this immense record. If my friend from New York wants to get any particular testimony before the House I hope he will use his own time for that purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I must necessarily go over this case very hurriedly. I will now refer briefly to one other precinct in Kansas City, and then I will leave Wyandotte County. But before doing so, let me make this observation in regard to the vote of the Third precinct. It seems that the majority which was given Mr. Moore in that precinct was 25. He was given 335 votes; his opponent, the contestee, 310 votes, leaving Mr. Moore a majority of 25.

The usual Democratic majority in this third precinct in a Presidential year is about 100. Mr. Moore ran ahead of his ticket, and Mr. Funston behind his, and it is admitted that little interest was taken in Funston's election. But however that may be, the Republicans were generous enough to let Moore have 25 majority. I think I have shown that the frauds practiced in this precinct were sufficient to justify the rejection of the whole poll. But to reject the poll would be to take from Moore the small majority that has been graciously conceded him.

It is clearly not a case where justice would be subserved by the rejection of the entire precinct. If the contestant will suffer greater injury by rejecting the poll than by letting the fraud stand, the only just and legal thing to do is to correct the poll by adding the votes out of which the contestant has clearly been defrauded. To do that is to elect him without considering any other question in the case.

But, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say something in regard to the manner in which the election was conducted in the fifth precinct. At that precinct there was all manner of cheating and intimidation indulged in by the Republican managers of the election. They stationed a negro policeman in front of the voting place, a man named Pres Younger, who refused to permit men to hold scratched tickets or give them to voters, stating that such tickets were illegal and that he, as an officer of the law, would not permit them to be used by colored voters.

This is established by the testimony of Taylor, the recorder of deeds for this District, who is a resident of Kansas City, and by that of others. Colored men holding tickets with Funston's name scratched therefrom were not permitted to vote them.

Mr. LACEY. How many Democrats were intimidated by that action?

Mr. JONES. One hundred voters, colored people mostly, it is estimated, were thus prevented from voting. The colored people as a rule were not in favor of the election of Mr. Funston, as the witness Taylor and others say. But I will say for the benefit of my friend from Iowa, and others on his side of the House, that if he will read the testimony produced before this House in the Fifty-first Congress, of which Congress I believe he was a member, in the case of McDuffie against Turpin, and that of Venable against Langston, he will be reminded, if he has forgotten the fact so soon, that his party threw out hundreds and thousands of votes in those cases, thus giving seats to Republican contestants upon far less evidence of intimidation than is shown to have existed in this case, and he probably voted to unseat the Democrats on those occasions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer very briefly to a few other facts in connection with this case. There are others who desire to speak on this side; and I will content myself with a very brief reference to the dispute over the vote of Allen County.

The law of the State of Kansas requires that the commissioners of election shall sign the election returns. In the county of Allen, Mr. Funston's own county, where he is given on the face of the returns 93 majority, not a single one of the commissioners of election signed the returns.

It is true the clerk of the board signed the name of the president of the board, which he says was by his direction and permission; but the other two commissioners of election were not even asked to sign the returns, and one of them testifies in the record and gives his reason for it, that he would not have signed the returns even if he had been requested to do so. The law bearing upon this point is so plain that it is hardly necessary to refer to it.

All the text-writers upon this question declare that where the returns are not signed by at least a majority of those who are required to sign them, in the absence of an express statutory provision providing that they need not do so, they can not be received, and the Committee on Elections in their report have quoted from the decisions of the supreme courts of various States from Maine to Florida to sustain that proposition.

So, Mr. Speaker, upon this point there can be no doubt, and even if every question of fraud, of false registration, and of false naturalization, be eliminated from this case, Mr. Moore is entitled to and must receive the seat which he claims. Mr. Funston is given 93 majority in Allen County, and if the vote of that county is rejected for the want of proper authentication, Mr. Moore is elected.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that Mr. Moore claims, and his attorneys have figured out, that his majority is over 1,300. The Committee on Elections is unable to find the testimony to support so large a claim, but for the reasons which I have so imperfectly and briefly given the House, we have felt justified in reporting that the contestant should be given the seat now held by the contestee. The frauds practiced by the Republican party in Kansas City were of the most flagrant and shameless character, and Mr. Funston was the beneficiary of these frauds.

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL] has devoted three pages of his report to the discussion of the testimony of five persons who, he says, are gamblers, and besides, residents of Missouri. He evidently proceeds upon the theory that the majority of the Committee on Elections rely somewhat upon that testimony. Such is not the case. The majority do not even refer to it, and they certainly based none of their conclusions upon it.

Mr. MCCALL. With reference to the testimony of those five gamblers produced by the contestant, I should like to ask the gentleman if that testimony tends to prove the claim of the contestant that the gambling element was working in the interest of the contestee? That is the relevancy of that.

Mr. JONES. If that is the only relevancy it has I will simply say in all kindness that I think my friend made a great mistake to devote one-third of his report to that sort of testimony.

It may not be very important, but to my mind the evidence establishes conclusively that the gambling element in Kansas City was upon the side of the Republican party. Be that as it may, however, the contestant's claim to a seat in Congress is not based upon the testimony of any gambler. For the most part it is supported by the testimony of Republicans who became disgusted with the corrupt practices of their party.

Mr. BROWN. How much time has the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts). The gentleman has occupied fifty-five minutes.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk as a substitute for the report of the majority at this time, and I will ask for a separate vote upon them when the vote is taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish the resolutions read now?

Mr. MCCALL. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That H. L. Moore was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Second Congressional district of Kansas, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Edward H. Funston was elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Second Congressional district of Kansas, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I agree with my friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES] in one statement he has made, and that is that the record in this case is very voluminous. The testimony occupies nearly 1,600 pages. In the vast extent of that record lies the contestant's safety. It is because this record is so vast, contains so much that is irrelevant, and because it is absolutely impossible during the brief time allowed for this debate for the House to get the few grains of truth in this great mass of chaff—it is because of these facts that an injustice may be done the contestee. I venture to say that if time were granted to carefully sift this testimony there is not a lawyer on the Democratic side, if he looked at it fairly and dispassionately, who could reach any other conclusion than the one reached by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], a member of the Committee on Elections, who was honored a few days ago by a nomination as judge of the court of appeals of his State. I believe you would reach the same conclusion he has reached, and find that Mr. Funston was legally elected to this House and is entitled to retain his seat.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that every Democratic member of this House can not be in his seat and give some attention to the character of the testimony produced here by the contestant, and upon which he relies in his attempt to overturn this election. It is declared here that there was a great conspiracy to commit frauds on the ballot. What is the evidence? At the outset, he produces the testimony of the chairman of the Democratic committee and of the bolting Republican committee that it was proposed by the Republicans to commit great frauds. Is that claim at all novel in the conduct of an election in this country? Is it unusual for this chairman or that chairman, before an election, to claim that his antagonist proposes to commit frauds?

If these claims are to be regarded as evidence, the election that could stand in this country would be rare indeed. I assume, however, that you do not propose to unseat a member and base your verdict upon charges merely. I assume that you will say to the contestant, "If there is any fraud, you shall have the fullest latitude to prove it; we will hear your testimony, but we can not regard a charge without proof." The majority of the committee at the outset of their report, very prudently call attention to the difficulty of proving such charges. That, surely, is a wise precaution, in view of the character of the testimony. Let us consider the contestant's case on this point.

He claims, at the outset, that there were 1,991 fraudulent registrations in Kansas City. This claim shrinks somewhat when he comes to produce the proof, and he says in his brief that there were 400 names illegally registered upon which votes were cast, and then he descends another notch in his claim, and declares that of these 400 he has "hunted down" 128.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may be a very disagreeable, a very disreputable thing to "hunt down" men, but that is exactly what the law requires, and I assume that is exactly what this House will require. You will say to the contestant, that no matter how much he may claim, you can deduct from the contestee's vote only such votes as he shall condescend to "hunt down." Let me again call attention to the manner in which this testimony is introduced.

Complainant's claim in the last analysis is that 128 names were fraudulently registered and voted upon in the last election in Kansas City. This is something of a shrinking from its original magnificent proportions, but let us look at the character of the testimony as against these 128 names. What is it? My friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has quoted from McCrary on Elections the most extreme rule of evidence he has been able to find, and attempts to make it cover the contestant's testimony on this branch of the case. Extreme, however, as this rule is, it does not cover a particle of the testimony that is presented by the contestant on this point.

What is the gentleman's rule of evidence? It is that you may produce a witness living in a precinct or a locality to testify that certain voters alleged to live in that particular precinct or locality did not live there, according to the witness' knowledge. If it is a small community, or a small precinct, and the witness has lived there for a great length of time, and has had an opportunity for knowing the facts, his testimony is entitled to weight. If it is a large city, and he has resided there for only a brief time, his testimony is entitled to no weight. I agree that such testimony is relevant and may be considered for what it is worth. It is negative testimony, but it is not hearsay.

The testimony, however, produced by the contestant does not come within this rule. He could have had the residents of the precinct in question testify as to whether or not they knew of certain persons living in the precinct. They could have been cross-examined and the committee could have decided whether this negative testimony was entitled to any consideration. But what in fact has he done? He sent out a man to make inquiries in the precinct of the persons he should have called as witnesses, and has him testify as to what these persons said. He kindly saves the committee the trouble of going to the sources of the evidence and he produces only hearsay.

The contestant's witness, Rooney, can testify as to what he knows or does not know as to the existence of given persons, but he can not testify as to what third persons told him of the existence of the persons in question. If the third person's testimony is material he should be called and put under oath and cross-examined, but it is contrary to all rules of evidence to proceed as the contestant has proceeded in the cases of these 128 men, whom he claims he has "hunted down." The testimony which he produces has not only the disadvantage of being negative, but it is also purely hearsay. I assume you will not accord to this testimony any weight whatever.

But badly as the case upon this point is made out, it is met by the contestee. In a great many cases he produces evidence of a positive character, and witnesses testify that they actually knew the voter in question, and that he lived in the precinct, and in many other instances the record shows that the voter in question did not vote at all. If you had time to investigate the evidence of the contestant you would find that of the 128 men he claims were fraudulently registered, there is no legal proof as to a single individual that he was fraudulently registered; that as to a great many of them there is evidence that they did not vote at all, and that there is practically no evidence that those who did vote voted for Mr. Funston.

With these somewhat general observations on this portion of the contestant's case, I will call attention to the third precinct of Kansas City, about which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has argued at such length. It is claimed that in this precinct, after the ballots were counted at the time of the election, they were properly returned to the county clerk, who is made by law the custodian of the ballots, and that they were afterwards stolen and that certain Republican ballots, which had the contestee's name erased and that of the contestant inserted, were removed and straight Republican ballots substituted.

The county clerk was called by the contestant. He testified on the 2d day of March, some four months after election, and it is very significant that the person who first asked for the ballots in that particular precinct was the counsel for the contestant. He called for these ballots and the county clerk said he had them. He supposed he did have them, but upon investigation he found that they were not in his office, and then, very mysteriously on the next morning, they were found upon the gate-post of a neighbor who brought them to the county clerk and the clerk produced them before the notary.

I say there are one or two very significant things here. In the first place it would be extraordinary that the judges of elections should be able to tell four months after the election how many Republican ballots had Funston's name erased and Moore's written in except from their count made at the time of election. That count showed that Funston only ran four votes behind his ticket. It is improbable, to say the least, that they should have made such a count if the ballots as they had just passed under their eyes showed that Funston's name had been scratched upon forty tickets. In the second place the ballots as finally found and counted corresponded exactly with the count made by the contestant's witnesses on the night after the election, and at this precinct certainly there was a Democratic judge of election. In the next place consider the question who had any interest to steal those ballots.

The contestee had no reason to suppose there would be any recount. There was no recount in other portions of the district. His case rested upon the original count. These ballots, as I have said, were first called for by the contestant and were produced mysteriously at the proper moment to make a foundation for the cry of fraud, and they were brought in and an attempt made to fasten the fraud upon the contestee. If they were stolen by anyone they were stolen, in my judgment, by the man who had an interest to steal them, and not by the contestee, who had the votes as they were counted, and who relied upon the count of the election officers made on the night following the election. To him what was subsequently done with the ballots was entirely immaterial.

Time will not permit me to go into the details of the testimony, but there is one particular instance which the gentleman from Virginia has mentioned that I think should be discussed, that is as to the certificate in Allen County. The precinct officers made their return to the county commissioners. It is the office of the county commissioners, as a canvassing board for the county, to canvass the returns and an abstract of their determination is to be returned to the State canvassers. The county commissioners of that county, in accordance with a custom which had prevailed there for years, signed the certificate simply with the name of the chairman.

The chairman directed the clerk to sign the name of the chairman to the certificate, and it was done, as had been done in that county from time immemorial. The Democratic county commissioner was present. He testified that they went through the votes, and that the votes were footed up. There is no evidence that he made any objection whatever, and he admitted that during the three years that he had been a county commissioner he had never signed a return. So the whole business was evidently done in good faith.

But let us admit for a moment that there was a technical failure to comply with the requirements of the statute. Was it such a failure as should disfranchise that whole county, throw out the votes of all those people, and practically set aside an election, or was the provision of the statute purely directory in its character—mandatory upon the officers, but simply directory when the question should arise of practically depriving the people of that county of the right of suffrage?

The gentleman from Virginia has correctly stated the statute of Kansas with reference to the certificate, but there is a provision in the laws of Kansas to which he did not call attention, and which, in my judgment, conclusively disposes of the claim that the failure of the commissioners to sign the return was fatal. The people of Kansas, with a spirit worthy of their early history, when the great contest for freedom was fought upon their soil, declared in section 2388 of their election laws that—

> Whenever it shall satisfactorily appear that any person has received the highest number of votes for any office, such person shall receive the certificate of election, notwithstanding the provisions of law may not have been fully complied with in noticing and conducting the election, so that the real will of the people may not be defeated by an informality of any officer.

That provision stands in the laws of the State of Kansas today, and it is to the effect that if any election officer, or any man having a duty to perform in connection with an election, shall commit any informality in connection therewith, it shall not be lawful to set aside the will of the people on that account. Therefore I contend, Mr. Speaker, that even if the point which the gentleman from Virginia makes is a good one—though I claim that it is not sustained by authorities—the provision of the laws of Kansas which I have cited would overcome that point, would set aside the informality, and let the will of the people stand.

There is another point which the gentleman from Virginia did not allude to in relation to the county canvassing board. The duties of that board are purely ministerial. They have no right to do anything except to add up the votes and sign their names. There is a State canvassing board, composed of the principal officers of the State, who are to take the separate returns and make up the grand return for the whole State.

The State canvassers have passed on this question, and they have found that Mr. Funston was entitled to the vote of that county as originally certified. And even going beyond that, if there were no returns at all, it would be entirely proper to go back of all returns and ascertain what the votes actually cast were, to the intent that the will of the people should not be set aside.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the time which I can occupy in this debate is very limited; but before closing I wish to submit one or two observations of a general character.

I believe that if you will read this testimony you will find that it is made up of extravagant claims and hearsay statements that should never receive the sanction and approval of this House for the purpose of setting aside an election. A grave injustice would not only be done in the present case, but a vicious precedent would be established for the future.

What is to be gained by turning this member from his seat? Will it help the contestant in his next canvass to go back to the people of that Commonwealth who, from the time when they were first organized to the present day, have never been denied representation in Congress, have never had a representative of theirs turned away from the doors of this Chamber—is it going to help him in his contest to go back to the people of Kansas exhibiting to them the plunder of this seat? Far from it, for this is a crime which, if perpetrated, those people will most quickly resent.

Is it necessary for the majority party in this House to forcibly and wrongfully take away this seat and add another member to their number? You already have too large a majority. It is almost impossible now for you to get a quorum. To take away this member from our side is simply to add one to a majority already uselessly large. And I think I can say to my friend from Virginia that if this House should experience the same difficulty that the majority of the committee experienced in reaching an adverse conclusion to the contestee, it would consume a good many days before a quorum would be willing to sustain this claim.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], a member of the committee, who has been absent and has just returned, made a report this morning, which was put in at the Clerk's desk, and has not yet been printed. I ask that it be read as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

VIEWS OF T. H. PAYNTER.

I can not agree with the majority of the committee in its conclusion that H. L. Moore was, and Edward H. Funston was not, duly elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Second district of Kansas.

I believe Edward H. Funston should retain his seat, but have not had the time to write my views giving the reason which lead me to the conclusion.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I had overlooked, and that is the statement of the gentleman from Virginia with regard to the claim that a colored policeman, one Pres Younger, intimidated 100 voters of a certain precinct. The contestant introduced evidence which tended to show that there were 100 men there, Republicans, who would have voted for the contestant if it had not been for this colored policeman telling them they should not peddle scratched tickets. In that precinct Mr. Funston got 2 out of every 3 votes; he received a plurality of 200 votes.

Mr. Harrison, the Republican candidate for President, received 215 plurality. That precinct was Republican by 2 to 1. Is it not apparent that the contestant is making altogether too broad a claim when he asserts that a precinct which was Republican by 2 to 1 would have gone for the Democratic candidate if it had not been for the terribly wicked intimidation practiced by a colored policeman? This colored policeman is shamefully overworked. This contention is a good deal in keeping with the charges made against Mr. Cromwell. It is alleged that he was a general sleight-of-hand performer. This is simply an epithet applied to him by one of the contestant's witnesses.

That same witness said that Mr. Cromwell traveled under an alias; but when he was asked to give any alias that he had used he could not do so. The fact is that Mr. Cromwell is an editor, an entirely respectable citizen; and to intimate that in some unknown and mysterious way he juggled with those votes and deceived the Democratic judge of elections; that in some way he took out 40 or 50 Republican votes claimed to have been marked for Mr. Moore and put in their places votes for Mr. Funston and had the Democratic judge count them, seems absolutely preposterous. And the contestant's whole case, with its extravagant claims, its strained conclusions, and its general absurdity, will remind you of a celebrated case reported in a great work of fiction where the burden of the argument for the plaintiff was "Chops and tomato sauce! Great heavens, gentlemen!" [Laughter.]

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BROOKSHIRE). One hour and thirty minutes.

Mr. MCCALL. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Funston], the contestee.

[Mr. FUNSTON withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. JONES. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, as the Second Congressional district of Kansas lies immediately west of the district I have the honor to represent, separated from it by the State line, I naturally became more acquainted with the facts and circumstances of this contest than would have been the case if the contest had arisen in a distant part of the country. I have, therefore, looked into the case a little, and have reached very decided conclusions as to its merits. Of course I do not expect in a brief time to go into the details of the case and re-present to the House what has been so well presented by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], who opened this discussion.

Upon the reports—the report of the majority and that of the minority—as well, I think, as upon the record itself, there are three leading questions or issues in this case. There are a large number of questions as to individual votes. In some instances individual votes cast for the contestee have been challenged successfully; in other instances individual votes cast and counted for him have been challenged, but the claim that they were fraudulent or ought not to have been counted has not been made good. The same statement is true as to individual votes cast here and there over the district for the contestant. In a general way of speaking, the evidence concerning these individual votes, these isolated votes, in the various counties other than Wyandotte, will not affect the result.

The question, then, as to who is elected is to be determined by three general, leading issues. One is as to a certain part of the vote in Wyandotte County, challenged by the contestant on the ground that those votes were cast by persons disqualified to vote, and that upon the whole case it is fair to conclude, and the evidence requires the conclusion, that they were cast for the contestee, and that his vote should be reduced by the number of these votes.

The report of the committee and the speech of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] have made very clear the existence of a huge Republican conspiracy in Kansas City, Kans., from which contestant is a sufferer.

Now, there is in this case, in Wyandotte County especially, not a little testimony which has been denominated in the report, and in this discussion to some extent, as hearsay and inadmissible—testimoney not to be considered. Passing by that—without conceding that contestant has not made a good case against contestee as to hundreds of other votes—and coming to the votes where there is other evidence undoubtedly competent, it will be found by anyone who looks carefully into this record that about 90 votes in that county were cast for the contestee by persons not authorized to vote—in the names of fictitious persons—by persons who had not lived long enough in the State or in the precinct or who did not live at all in the precinct or State, who were too young to vote, or who had been convicted of infamous crimes, disqualifying them from voting.

There are enough of these votes to destroy the apparant plurality for the contestee and leave contestant with a plurality.

Contestant also insists that in one of the precincts—the third precinct of Kansas City—from 40 to 50 votes were counted for the contestee when they should have been counted for him.

Now, the history of the election in this precinct is chronicled in the record somewhat at length. It is shown by the testimony of Democrats and Republicans that 40 or 50 Republican tickets were scratched—the name of the contestee [Mr. Funston] scratched off and the name of the contestant [Mr. Moore] written on them, and that these tickets were voted; that in some mysterious way the ballots were afterwards purloined from the proper custody, and when they came back they came in an old envelope—opened—after being away apparently for months—came from sources friendly in a political way to the contestee; and there evidently had been a substitution of ballots by which the contestee is given 40 to 50 votes more than he is entitled to and the like number taken from the contestant. Correcting this, the apparent plurality for the contestee would upon this ground alone disappear, and the contestant would be elected.

Mr. MCCALL. Does not the gentleman understand that the ballots to which he now refers were counted before they were stolen, and that upon the count as then made the contestee relies?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, to discuss that feature of the case will perhaps lead me to occupy more time than I desire to do. I do not wish, however, to evade it. That discussion makes necessary the consideration of the make-up of this election board and the influences that were about it. It makes necessary a general, and I hope in my case a brief, discussion of the whole evidence with relation to this particular precinct.

It transpires from the evidence and is undisputed—it can not be disputed on the record—that one of the persons who acted as judge at this precinct was never appointed as a judge; foisted himself upon the board, which had the full complement of judges without him; was the busy man in handling these ballots and in calling them off, and that this man Cromwell was an adept in what is called sleight of hand and jugglery. It is further established that one of the clerks became drunk during the progress of the count and that frequently the clerks would be four or five votes apart, and would simply get together without a recount to determine who was wrong and who right.

It further transpired in the testimony that when this clerk became so incapacitated, so weary from overwork and over-indulgence, that he had to be laid away, a man named Bigger, the only witness called by the contestee to meet the fraudulent registration testimony—Bigger, by some means or somehow, by somebody else or on his own motion, was assigned to take the place of the drunken clerk, the unsworn friend of the contestee in the count and his Samson witness in this election contest. Having taken the place of the clerk, Bigger went on with the count in his stead.

Now, in view of these facts briefly sketched, in view of the testimony of the judges—part of them admitted Republicans—that there were more ballots in this precinct scratched than appeared on the face of the returns or by the count, to be scratched; in view of the fact that it is evident from the testimony that these ballots were juggled with, and not counted correctly; that the ballots were then stolen and other ballots substituted; that a fraudulent count had been made by the Cromwells and Biggers and foisted upon the board for the purpose of gaining an unscrupulous partisan advantage—I say, in view of these facts, there can be no doubt that the contestee is not entitled to the seat that he holds.

This is a part of the history of this third precinct, and it stands practically uncontradicted. More of its history, taken from the record, is that this precinct ordinarily gave 100 Democratic majority. Moreover, we have embodied in the minority report the declaration that the Republican party in this precinct made no particular effort in behalf of Mr. Funston, while a very strong effort was made for his competitor, the contestant. So, it is is perfectly clear from the evidence and from the admitted facts in the case that in this third precinct of Kansas City, Kans., the contestant was deprived of from 40 to 50 votes which should have been honestly counted for him, and that there were counted for the contestee 40 or 50 votes which had not been cast for him at all, the correction of all which, properly made, would change the result of the election as declared and seat contestant, however any or all other issues might be determined.

It has been suggested that the contestant in this case was a Populist, and that the Democrats did not vote for him. This is a peculiar attempt, in a House largely Democratic, and in which there are few Populist members, to arouse prejudice in defiance and contradiction of the facts. I believe such appeals against a man fairly elected would not affect the judgment of this House, even with a base of fact upon which to rest. But here the fact is lacking. Col. Moore was nominated by a Democratic convention presided over by Col. Jones, of Kansas, who was the United States marshal of the Kansas district under Mr. Cleveland during his first Administration, and the national Democratic committeeman for the State.

The Populists nominated another and not Col. Moore. The Populist candidate subsequently withdrew, and I have no doubt that the Populist vote was largely cast for the contestant, Moore. More recently, within a few weeks, conventions have been held in the same district. The Republicans having, after long deliberation, concluded that a change would be well, nominated another than the contestee for Representative in Congress.

The Democratic convention, however, unanimously renominated Col. Moore, and adopted resolutions declaring it to be their firm belief that he was fairly and honestly elected in 1892 and is entitled to the seat now held by Mr. Funston. The Populist convention met and nominated a third man as their candidate. There are, therefore, at this time three tickets in the field all over Kansas, with Col. Moore on the Democratic ticket.

Now, there may be some people too good to be voted for outside their own party. Possibly the contestee from Kansas may be one—possibly the Kansas Republicans may be of that stripe, may be such excellent people, so strait-laced, and so proper in everything that they would spurn any vote cast for them if not cast by one of their own party. I do not know, as a matter of fact, whether there are such people. But when Col. Moore, the Democratic nominee—the Democratic candidate—bearing aloft the standard of his party, received also the votes of the Populists of that district cast for him, as a very sensible way of testifying to their belief and judgment that he would be a better representative than the contestee, there does not appear any reason why, when the election honestly went in his favor, Moore should be excluded and Funston retained.

I am tempted to say something about the carefully planned election iniquities in Wyandotte County. There is overwhelming testimony sufficient to satisfy any man who reads it that there was a huge Republican election conspiracy in Kansas City, Kans.; that there was much done in carrying it out; that the only reason why it did not prove thoroughly and overwhelmingly successful was that extraordinary precautions were taken and extraordinary efforts made by the Democrats and by the anti-Buchan Republicans to prevent the wholesale colonization and fraudulent registration and unlawful naturalizing of people to vote the Republican ticket.

The anti-Buchan Republicans, while supporting the Republican ticket in general, including the Congressional nominee, were yet in favor of confining the voting to those who were entitled to vote, and of excluding from the privilege of suffrage the ballot-box stuffer and the repeater. There is in this record evidence, uncontradicted and irrefutable, of some of these gentlemen showing what was done, the extraordinary pains taken, the house-to-house canvass, the careful inquiry and investigation, the stationing of challengers at the polls everywhere, the disregard of challengers by Republican judges—all tending to show that this election, despite all the precautions taken, was still far short of being an entirely fair election.

It was the common practice of the Republican judges to disregard challenges. A challenge would be made by a challenger stationed at the polls for the purpose. "I challenge that man. He is not qualified to vote."

A Republican judge would say, "Oh, I know him; he is all right," and in would go the vote immediately.

Now, under the law of Kansas there is no way of identifying ballots, except when there is a challenge, and then it becomes the imperative duty of the judges to note upon the poll book, opposite the name of the person challenged, the fact that he is challenged, and to mark upon the ticket which he votes a number which identifies it, by being identical with the number opposite the name of the voter. When that is done and A is challenged, if the challenge is made good, you know exactly how A voted, and you know from whom the vote so fraudulently cast is to be subtracted.

But in most instances these Republican judges conveniently dismissed the challenges, in violation or disregard of law, by saying, "Oh, I know him; he is all right," and shoving the ballot into the box with no possible means of identifying it.

Now, then, contestant had subpœnas issued for these challenged voters. These people charged to have fraudulently voted were searched for by an officer armed with subpœnas, charged with the process of the court, but they could not be found. Persons sent to make inquiry; people who had lived and done business for long years in the neighborhoods from which men were registered, letter-carriers who had traveled upon the routes for years, did not know them, and nobody could find them.

Now, in view of these facts, and of the further facts that the challenges were made by Democrats and were disregarded by Republicans; that the unknown and undiscoverable were registered in blocks of more than five, many times five often, by Republican heelers; that they were voted in hordes in charge of Republican bosses—these facts, taken together, justify the conclusion of fact, in the absence of any evidence upon the other side to meet or controvert them; they warrant the conclusion of the law that contestee got the fraudulent votes.

The contestee's friends were found in company with the fraudulent voters. The contestee's friends marched them to the polls. The contestee's friends had them registered. The contestee's friends guided their hands when they signed the papers necessary to be signed in making out their declarations of intention to become citizens; papers not one word or syllable of whose contents they were acquainted with; these people who could not speak the language; who could not understand a syllable of the language, to whom oaths were not explained, whose residence was not inquired about, concerning whom no inquiries were made. They were brought to the place for the issuing of papers by the Republican bosses having them in charge, and that was enough.

Contestee made not an effort to produce them, and has not a word to say upon the subject.

It is said that the testimony in regard to these fraudulently colonized and fraudulently voted Republican repeaters in Kansas

City, Kans., is fully met by evidence introduced by the contestee. The showing of the contestee upon that point consists first and last of the testimony of one Biggar, whose testimony is nine-tenths hearsay, at least one-half of the remaining tenth pure fabrication, shown by overwhelming testimony to be so, and doubtful, uncertain, and worthless as to the remainder. With this one man, the contestee seeks to overthrow the testimony of dozens. This is called meeting the case.

There is one other general head upon which it is claimed that the contestant is entitled to his seat. If the decision upon this point be in his favor, then though the other two general claims that I have briefly discussed be decided against him, he still must win. It is that the vote of Allen County was never canvassed and certified by the officers required to do that work. In that county there is a plurality counted in favor of the contestee of 93 votes, his total plurality in the district on the face of the returns being 81; so that with Allen County out, and all else remaining unchanged, Moore would go in by a plurality of 12.

The majority of the committee find that in Allen County there was no canvass by the officers required to make the canvass; that there were no papers signed or certified or deposited anywhere by the officers required to make the canvass and certify to the returns; and that therefore, not as a matter of choice, not as a mere matter of technicality, but as an absolute mandate of the law, that which is uncanvassed, that which is uncertified, that which is no evidence, that which is nothing, can not and must not be considered as full and sufficient.

Now, I can not go into every detail of testimony in regard to this Allen County. The county commissioners, as the canvassing board, are required to make a canvass and sign the returns. No solitary one of them signed the returns. They did not even make the canvass. The canvass was made by the county clerk. The name of one of them purports to be signed by the county clerk, under a general authority given to the county clerk by this officer to sign his name generally to such documents as it ought to be signed to—a very large, very liberal, and very indefinite grant of power. This man is only one of three.

It has been decided by the Kansas courts, decided by the courts everywhere, when the question has been passed upon, that where a board consists of a certain specified number, less than a majority of that number—there being no specification in the law—can not constitute the board. And that must be true. It is a matter of reason as well as of law. If a canvassing board consists of three, it stands to reason, and is universal law, I believe, that unless there be a special provision to the contrary less than two of the three can not constitute that board.

Now, at most and best in this particular case one of these men has his name signed by the county clerk. The county clerk is required to attest the signatures of the three commissioners. He does not attest any signature. It is simply signed "A, county commissioner, by B, county clerk." That is all there is of it.

That is no more than if some one had come to this House with a memorandum upon the back of an envelope, and if we, in looking over this case, had said, "We do not find any returns from one of these counties," and he had said, "That is a fact, but I was out there and made a little memorandum which I have here, and I am satisfied that this is about right."

Therefore, as a matter of absolute legal necessity, the contestee, with full and explicit warning in the notice of contest, with full and explicit knowledge of the effect of the change of the vote of this county, was either unable or unwilling to supply, as could have been done if the facts were his way, that which has not been otherwise supplied.

There is a great deal said about what is in the notice of contest, and what is before the House and what is not before the House. If the committee had rigorously enforced the law, not a solitary syllable offered by the contestee would now be before the House.

The law is absolute and imperative as to the time within which the contestee must file his answer and his countercharge, if he claims anything affirmatively. It matters not what you require, whether personal service upon the contestant and the contestee, or service by leaving copies at the residence of the contestee and the contestant. The contestee is out of time, and has no plea and no case at all. He did not file his answer until thirty-one days after notice of contest was served on him, and thirty days is the utmost limit of time allowed him within which to serve his answer and countercharge. The committee in great charity to him, casting aside the brush in the way of technicalities, determined to decide the case upon its merits.

I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, the committee who have considered this vast volume of evidence, closely printed, a great deal of it irrelevant, a great deal contradictory, have boiled it down and expressed in their conclusion the ultimate fact that the contestant, H. L. Moore, is entitled to represent the Second district of Kansas in this House, and that the contestee, Edward H. Funston, who for seventeen months of the term has been the sitting member here, with all that that implies—all the pay, emoluments, and privileges—ought now to take his departure and leave the remaining seven months of the two years to the man who was elected by the people of that Kansas district, and who is now asking of this House a judgment in his favor on the merits of his contest.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the Speaker how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has about thirty-five minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has twenty-two minutes.

Mr. JONES. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts going to use any of his time now?

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield eleven minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. DANIELS].

Mr. DANIELS. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect in the very short time that is allotted here to present anything like an argument to the House as to the merits of this case; but I will say right here, in reply to the suggestion which has just been made relative to the service and the notice of contest, that the act of Congress requires the notice to be served upon the contestee. That is the language. It does not provide for serving such notice according to the local law in that respect whatever. It has used its own language, and prescribed its own terms; and that is, that the notice shall be served on the contestee. This notice was not served within thirty days, and if it had stopped there the contestant would certainly not have been in a condition to present any case upon the grounds stated in his notice.

But the contestee, after the expiration of thirty days from the time of notice, after the time the notice was personally served upon him, served an answer in this case upon the contestant; and that, I understand, dispenses entirely with the objection that the notice of the contestant was not served in time. It is because of that circumstance, and not because the notice was served in time, that this issue has been presented by these parties for the consideration of the House.

Now, in the report of the committee, as I have not time to go over the case of the county of Wyandotte, the committee by its majority conclude that they could not stand upon this contest on the face of the count in the county of Wyandotte, and they wind up their statement by this clause:

> The conclusion is, that the apparent plurality in Wyandotte County of 179 votes in favor of contestee is not his real plurality, after excluding illegal votes and counting correctly votes erroneously counted for one candidate when actually cast for the other; but that the true and legal plurality of contestee in said county over contestant is very small, if in fact anything.

So that the majority concede substantially that the sitting member did have a plurality in the county of Wyandotte, saying nothing about the various objections which have been made in reference to these 128 persons who, it is alleged, were traced out as illegally registered. As to those persons, however, from the evidence of Mr. Biggar, a grocer who resided in what is called "The Patch" in the third precinct of the First ward, and the evidence of Mr. Garas, who was employed by the contestant, and the evidence of Mr. Anderson, it appears that these witnesses went down to search for the individuals included in that list of 128 alleged illegal voters and that in their investigations they found 46 of the number.

The evidence of the clerk, too, at the time when this subject was brought up before the notary for examination, is that he had traced out from the schedule the names given to him for the purpose of identifying persons alleged to have voted illegally, and that there were only 86 instead of 128 that were known to have voted at the election; the balance of the 128 not having voted at all.

But, passing that over, I propose to call the attention of the House to the objection that is made to the votes cast in Allen County, because it is substantially conceded in this report, as well as in the argument, that unless Allen County, where the contestee had a plurality of 93 votes, can be thrown out, the case of the contestant must fail. It is therefore asserted in the report, as well as in the argument here, that because the examination which was required by the statute to be made by the county commissioners was not signed by a majority of the commissioners, therefore that vote must be thrown out.

Now, it appears by the evidence of three different persons, two of whom were commissioners and one the county clerk, that there was an actual canvass make of the vote of Allen County, and that the plurality, as it has been stated here, was given for the contestant at 93. But it is claimed that the statute has provided that the statement or return of the commissioners must be signed by them, or at least by a majority of them, and that if it is not so signed the vote of the entire county must be rejected. Now, I take issue with that statement and with the correctness of the reference that has been made to the laws upon this subject. It is stated in the report, and repeated by the gentleman from Virginia in his argument, that this was a return, and that the law required, as shown by the authorities cited, that such a return, in order to be valid, must be signed by the persons who make it, or by a majority of them, and that otherwise it is illegal and void.

I concede the effect and force of those authorities entirely, but they have nothing whatever to do with this case. The law applicable to this case did not require a return to be made by the three commissioners or by a majority of the commissioners who made the canvass of the vote. The votes of the entire county were returned to the county clerk. Then the question was brought before the county commissioners as to what the vote was and for whom it had been given, and the law of Kansas, instead of requiring that a return should be made by the commissioners, required only that they should determine and ascertain who the persons were who had the largest number of votes.

The law does not require them to make a return in any sense whatever, but simply to make a certificate and annex that certificate to an abstract of the vote, which is not required to be signed by the commissioners at all. The statute is in these words:

On the Friday next following the election the county clerk and the commissioners of the county, or a majority of said commissioners, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, shall meet at the office of the said county clerk, and shall proceed to open the several returns which shall have been made to that office, and said commissioners shall determine the persons who have received the greatest number of votes in the county for the several offices—and so on, including members of Congress.

So that all the commissioners were required to do was to determine who the persons were who had received the greatest number of votes. They were not required to enter into any statement to be signed by them as to what the number of votes was. The number was fixed upon the face of the papers brought before them from the different precincts of the county, and they were only to look through those papers and determine who were elected, and who had the largest number of votes according to the canvass they then made.

Mr. TERRY. Do the precinct returns go to the secretary of state?

Mr. DANIELS. No, sir; I will come to that later. The statute further provides:

And such determination shall be reduced to writing and signed by said commissioners and attested by the clerk, and shall be annexed to the abstract of votes given for such officers respectively hereinafter provided for in section 41 [31] of this act.

That is all that the commissioners were required to do, simply to canvass the vote, and the evidence shows that they did canvass the vote at this election. They stated to the clerk the number of votes given in the different precincts, and he testifies that he put down the number correctly and stated the result. Then the statute goes on further and provides, for the purpose of tracing the number of votes given in the different precincts and in the county, taking all the precincts together, that the clerk—not the commissioners—shall make an abstract of those votes. It does not require this to be done by the commissioners. The language of the statute is:

As soon as the commissioners aforesaid shall have determined the persons who have received the highest number of votes for any office, the county clerk shall make out abstracts of the votes in the following manner.

The fourth abstract mentioned is "the abstract of votes for a Representative in Congress on one sheet."

Then it provides further:

Which abstract being certified and signed by the county clerk, shall be deposited in his office, and certified copies of abstracts numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 (when said officers have been voted for at said election), under the official seal of said clerk, shall be placed in separate envelopes indorsed and directed to the secretary of state and forwarded immediately to the seat of government by mail; and the said clerk shall respectfully indorse on the back of the envelope in which the said certified copies are inclosed: "Certified copy of the abstract of votes cast for governor, etc., member of the Legislature, etc. (as the case may be), cast at the regular election in ——— county, 18—.

That is what was to be done here in the way of returning the votes over the signatures of the commissioners. They were simply to determine who had the largest number of votes at this election in Allen County, and when they had determined this they were required to reduce the result to writing, having nothing whatever to do with the ultimate disposition of the question as to who was elected member of Congress from that district. Then it became the duty of the clerk to make out an abstract of the vote and to send this abstract signed by himself to the secretary of state in order that it might be canvassed by the State board of canvassers in determining who was elected. And here we have at pages 98, 99, and 100 of this case just such an abstract as the law required the clerk to make.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McCALL. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WAUGH].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for eleven minutes.

Mr. WAUGH. Mr. Speaker, the time allotted me is entirely inadequate to allow me to enter into the details of the case. The record is very voluminous; and the majority of the committee in passing through it have formulated two or three propositions which they think have been sufficiently established by the evidence to oust the contestee from his seat in this House. If this case were being presented before a court of justice where judgment is directed by the law and the evidence, I would have no fear of the contestee's case. But before this tribunal, where our consciences are to some extent stifled by political prejudice (and this remark applies to all of us), I must admit that I approach the case with some fear.

I want to call the attention of the House to the charge of conspiracy in Wyandotte County. That entire charge is based and built upon the evidence of Mr. Strickland. He is asked such questions as, "Did you hear of a conspiracy to pad the registration?" "Did you hear of 1,991 fraudulent registrations?" On these points the evidence comes from Mr. Strickland. "Did you hear of there being about 400 fraudulent votes cast in Wyandotte County?" The only evidence we have on that subject comes from Mr. Strickland. "Did you hear the further statement made in the discussion of this case that we have hunted down 128 of the 400 by a house to house search and find that they in fact voted?" That comes from Mr. Strickland. "You have heard the statement also that there were persons sent out before the election and after it, all over that precinct, to ascertain the residence of certain persons registered?" That comes from Mr. Strickland. This whole fabric of fraudulent registration and fraudulent voting is based upon the testimony of Mr. Strickland.

Now, I want to state as a legal proposition (and I will submit it to any lawyer on the floor) that the testimony of Mr. Strickland is not before us from a legal standpoint, for the reason that he has not signed the testimony that he gave before the notary public. I desire to have the Clerk read the law on this subject.

Mr. BOATNER. Was the omission to sign intentional, or did it happen through an inadvertence?

Mr. WAUGH. He left before it was done. The gentleman will remember a letter which has been read here about Mr. Strickland abruptly leaving the State. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows from the Revised Statutes of the United States:

SEC. 122. The officer shall cause the testimony of the witnesses, together with the questions proposed by the parties or their agents, to be reduced to writing in his presence, and in the presence of the parties or their agents, if attending, and to be duly attested by the witnesses respectively.

SEC. 864. Every person deposing as provided in the preceding section, shall be cautioned and sworn to testify the whole truth, and carefully examined. His testimony shall be reduced to writing by the magistrate taking the deposition, or by himself in the magistrate's presence, and by no other person, and shall, after it has been reduced to writing, be subscribed by the deponent.

Mr. WAUGH. Now, Mr. Speaker, the law is positive in requiring a witness to subscribe his testimony; otherwise it can not be received in a contested-election case. Gentlemen on the other side are arguing here for the enforcement of the very same principle I am contending for. The law says that the deponent must subscribe his name to his testimony or it can not be received. The gentleman from Virginia resorts to the statute of Kansas for the purpose of throwing out the vote of Allen County, because the board of commissioners did not sign the returns from that county. I will ask my friend from Virginia why the law of the State of Kansas requires, as he contends, that the commissioners should sign that certificate, and whether that requirement of law is any more peremptory or obligatory than the law of the United States, which requires the deponent to sign his testimony, upon which you have built your fabric of conspiracy?

Mr. Strickland's testimony not being thus signed, it is, under the law, entirely out of the case and can not be considered.

But conceding that his testimony is in, I want to discuss the question for a moment from that standpoint, and I must pass on rapidly for I have only a few minutes. It is charged that the Republicans were conspiring in Wyandotte County for the purpose of padding the registration by putting fictitious names upon it, the names of persons who had no existence; and that afterwards they carried this conspiracy into effect by having persons vote fraudulently upon those names. Now, what is the fact in the case? Why, sir, the Republicans, the Democrats, and the Populists were never more active and vigilant than they were that year in Wyandotte County to prevent illegal voting.

Why the evidence in this record shows this, if the House pleases, that it was the Republican party that suggested to the Democrats and to the Populists the necessity for preserving the purity of elections; and the Democrats and the Populists and the Republican party were all hand in hand joined to suppress fraud and a violation of the elective franchise. They proposed Federal supervisors. That proposition came from the Republican party. The Democratic party and the People's party accepted the suggestion, and Federal supervisors stood at the polls, appointed in pursuance of that agreement, to see that frauds were not committed at the election.

But that is not all. Here is a conspiracy which has been perpetrated, as we are told, and yet in this one town there was an organization of 1,000, a Republican organization, to prevent fraud on the ballot in that county.

I will tell you the truth of the matter, gentlemen, and it is a fact which can not be contradicted. That man Buchan was objectionable to the Republican party and his ways were queer and devious in the political field, and this organization of a thousand Republicans acted in concert with the Democrats and Populists for the purpose of watching and preventing false registration by this man Buchan. We were told that there was false registration on the part of the Republicans by gentlemen on the other side. But I tell you that the purpose of this organization was to watch Buchan and see, as far as could be seen, that there was no opportunity for false registration by his procurement. The very suggestion of preventing the fraud came from the Republicans.

You can look at the action of the Republican party in Wyandotte County calmly and dispassionately, and no man of a judicial mind can find a semblance of fraud or conspiracy that you can charge on that party or on the Democratic party or on the Populist party in that election.

Ah, but they say there is no positive testimony as to how these persons voted. True there was none. The majority of the committee has gone to the pains to collate a large amount of authorities to establish the fact that a conspiracy may be proven by circumstantial evidence, a proposition conceded by all lawyers. But my friends will have a more difficult task to find an authority in point; they will have to find a decision which holds that a conspiracy may be established on the mere charge, without any proof.

But I want to call attention to the suggestion of intimidation that has been made in connection with this case. Press. Younger, a colored fellow, was at the polls to keep the peace; he was a supervisor or officer under the law; what did he do? They say his acts make a case of intimidation. He told some colored fellows who were peddling scratched tickets, that they were illegal, and if they persisted in peddling them around he would be compelled to arrest them. There was an issue made at once between them and Press. Younger, and they carried it to the election officers to decide the matter, and they decided that the tickets were legal, and consequently they went on and peddled them without any interference from Press. Younger or anybody else the entire day of the election.

There is a principle of law that every student twenty-four hours in the law knows, and that is, you must introduce the highest and best testimony you have of which the case is susceptible. Now, how do you prove that 100 colored voters were prevented from voting that day? Do you prove it by the voters themselves? Oh, no. They bring in one Taylor. He says that the colored people took great alarm at brass buttons and uniform worn by Press. Younger; that a police officer in uniform was a terror to them, and that Press. Younger was figuring that day in uniform and that the colored voters were therefore intimidated and did not vote.

I want to submit to any lawyer on this floor if he was going to prove a case of intimidation, as here charged, would he go to Taylor for his testimony that 100 voters were intimidated by Younger and did not vote, in his opinion, or would you bring in the parties intimidated and prove the fact by them. The evidence of the parties themselves is the just and primary evidence. No one will deny this primary evidence is not furnished by contestant, yet he asks that he be given 100 votes on the testimony of Taylor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply for a few moments to some of the statements made by gentlemen who have espoused the other side of this case. I shall occupy the time of the House as briefly a possible.

The contestee in this case declined to yield to a question from me when it seemed to me he was misquoting the testimony; and he afterwards challenged me to produce testimony that one single one of the one hundred and twenty-eight men who were hunted down, or "run down," as he described it, were illegal voters and had voted at his election.

Mr. FUNSTON. Oh, no; I beg pardon; I did not do any such thing.

Mr. JONES. Well, voted for you then.

Mr. FUNSTON. No; I never raised that question. I referred to the foreigners who were registered.

Mr. JONES. I am talking about the foreigners, too.

The gentleman read a letter from the chairman of the Democratic committee in Wyandotte County to the commissioner of elections, in which the former stated that the office of the latter was conducted in the most straightforward and honest manner, and upon the strength of that letter he proceeded to declare that the Democratic chairman "admits that the election in this precinct was honest and fair."

I submit to the House that this is very unfair, and that the letter read by the contestee does not justify any such statement as that made by him. Nobody claims that the commissioner of elections was guilty of any corrupt practices. But that outrageous frauds were perpetrated in this election can not be denied, and the chairman of the Democratic party has given the strongest testimony to that effect. His deposition was never signed, and for that reason we have not taken his testimony into consideration. It was not at all necessary to do so.

But the gentleman who has just taken his seat, my associate upon the Committee on Elections [Mr. WAUGH], makes the astonishing statement that every charge made by the contestant as to fraudulent registrations and illegal voting rests entirely upon the testimony of Mr. Strickland, the chairman of the Democratic committee, and that if his testimony were stricken out there would be nothing upon which the contestant could stand.

On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Elections expressly say in their report that they do not base one single conclusion at which they arrive, upon the testimony of Mr. Strickland. The evidence shows that when this deposition was taken it was printed out on a typewriter in the presence of Mr. Strickland, and the greater part of it read to him from time to time as he gave his testimony.

The Committee on Elections, however, disregarded Mr. Strickland's testimony entirely, simply because it was objected to. If the gentleman will read the report he will find this language:

> But excluding what was said by Strickland upon the objection of the contestee, because of his failure to sign his statement, the facts are established by other witnesses.

And yet my colleague says that we base our entire conclusions upon his testimony, and that wiping out that the contestant would have no case at all.

My colleague further says that in the consideration of election cases our consciences are "stifled by party prejudice." What party prejudice operates to stifle Democratic consciences in this case? The contestee himself declares that the contestant is not a Democrat, and that Democrats by hundreds would not vote for him, because he was known to be a Populist.

If this be true, surely there is little reason for the existence of prejudice in the minds of Democrats. You Republicans deny the Democracy of the contestant, and in order to prejudice his case, you have undertaken to show that he was a Populist. The contestee alone has attempted to excite party prejudice. He knows that the nine or ten Populists in this body can not seat Mr. Moore, and therefore he has labored hard to prove that he is a Populist and not a Democrat. The Democratic members of the Elections Committee have not inquired as to his politics; they have only asked whether or not he was elected. That is the question with which we have been concerned. If the contestant was fairly elected he is entitled to his seat, be he Populist, Republican, or Democrat.

Is there no testimony in this record, save hearsay evidence, to prove that a large number of the illegal registrations were voted for the Republican ticket? I hold in my hand a carefully prepared abstract of the testimony which shows that the evidence is full and conclusive as to sixty-eight of these fraudulent registrations. Sixty-eight votes were cast for the Republican ticket in the names of persons who either had no existence or were registered from places where they never resided, and therefore had no right to vote. This is shown by evidence the competency of which no man questions.

A Republican judge refused to recognize the challengers in nearly every case, but wherever the law upon that subject was observed the evidence shows that the challenged voter cast his ballot for Mr. Funston. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that he received the benefit of every one of these fraudulent votes. Republican bosses are not given to working for the success of Democrats.

My friend, Judge DANIELS, who is an able lawyer and a distinguished jurist, has undertaken to draw a distinction between the word "return" and the word "determination," as employed in the Kansas statute. He says that the language of the statute is that the "determination" shall be reduced to writing and signed by the commissioners and not that they shall sign the "returns." The gentleman is perfectly right as to the language of the statute. It is:

And such determination shall be reduced to writing, signed by said commissioners, and attested by the clerk.

But call it the "determination" or call it the "return," it must be signed by the commissioners.

The commissioners met in the clerk's office on the Friday succeeding the election for the purpose of determining how the vote of the county had been cast, and they were required, every one of them, to sign their names to the determination arrived at by them, and that was to be attested by the clerk and annexed to the abstract of the votes.

I will give you the very language of the certification that was actually made, so that it may be seen how the law was complied with:

In testimony, I have hereunto set my hand and caused this abstract to be attested by the county clerk of said county, the 11th day of November, 1892.

D. D. SPICER,
Chairman Board of County Commissioners of Allen County, and ex-officio Board of County Commissioners.
By E. M. ECKLEY,
Clerk Board of Canvassers.

There is absolutely no attestation by the clerk, and it is not pretended that more than one commissioner signed the return, determination, or abstract, as you may prefer to designate the finding. There is not a State in the Union where this question has arisen that has not decided that unless a majority at least of the judges sign, the returns must be rejected in the absence of other proof establishing the verity of the imperfect return. My friend has had the honor of sitting upon the supreme bench of the great State of New York, and he will not question this well-established rule of law.

Mr. DANIELS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. JONES. One word further, and then I will yield to the gentleman.

The gentleman says, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of the Committee on Elections admitted that without rejecting the county of Allen they could not seat Mr. Moore. I want to know where any such admission as that is to be found in their report. On the contrary, I have shown from the record that there were 68 illegal votes at least cast in Wyandotte County alone for the contestee, cast by people not entitled to register, or who had no real existence, but whose names were voted upon by repeaters.

I have shown how the ballots were stolen in the Third precinct and the contestant thereby deprived of from 80 to 100 votes that had been honestly cast for him. I have also made clear, I think, that large numbers of foreigners were naturalized illegally and afterwards fraudulently voted for the contestee. The plurality of Mr. Funston was only 81, and not 83 as the report of the minority puts it, and even without the vote of Allen County, in my humble judgment, Mr. Moore was elected by a handsome majority and should be given the seat to which he is fairly and honestly entitled.

Mr. DANIELS. I simply desire to ask the gentleman one question, and that is whether the statute does not provide that the State board of canvassers, consisting of the governor, attorney-general, treasurer, and secretary, shall canvass the votes upon the certified abstract of the clerk?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIELS. And then, whether the law does not provide further, upon the canvass of these districts, they shall decide who is elected, including a member of Congress?

Mr. JONES. Certainly; and just there I will call the gentleman's attention to the point, that while he makes a distinction between "return" and "determination" the board of county canvassers makes no such distinction. The only certificate which was ever made reads:

In testimony, I have hereto set my hand and caused this abstract to be attested.

This is signed by the chairman, if signed at all, and not by the clerk. The State board canvasses the votes "upon the certified abstract of the clerk." In this case the clerk has certified no "abstract." He has certified nothing whatever.

Will the gentleman say to me that this is such an attestation as is required by law? Will the gentleman say that the statute upon this subject has been complied with by the clerk or by anybody else?

Mr. DANIELS. It is only a mere informality. I will ask the gentleman a further question.

Mr. JONES. A mere informality!

Mr. DANIELS. Whether the statute does not provide also—

In all elections for the choice of any officer, unless it is otherwise expressly provided, the person having the highest number of votes for any office shall be deemed to have been elected to that office; and whenever it shall satisfactory appear that any person has received the highest number of votes for any office, such person shall receive the certificate of election, notwithstanding the provisions of law which may not have been fully complied with in noticing and conducting the election, so that the real will of the people may not be defeated by any informality of any officer.

Mr. JONES. This is the second time that statute has been read. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] read it once before.

Mr. DANIELS. I did not hear it then.

Mr. JONES. I presume that nearly every State in the Union has some such provision as that in its laws. The difficulty with Allen County is that it has never been made to appear in the manner the law regards as "satisfactory" that Mr. Funston received the largest number of votes in that county. No returns to that effect have ever been signed by the commissioners of election.

The law which you have quoted does not cover this fundamental and radical defect.

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. HULICK. If these returns had been signed according to the statute as the gentleman claims, would they have been then accepted? In other words, is there a charge of fraud against the vote in the county of Allen?

Mr. JONES. There is a serious charge in connection with the vote of Iola precinct in this county. Leaving that precinct out of consideration, I know of no reason why the vote of Allen County should not be accepted except that the returns have never been signed and authenticated. The contestant was put upon his guard as to this serious defect, and he should have supplied the evidence to cure it if he could have done so.

Mr. HULICK. I presume the gentleman does not wish to make a wrong impression on the jury?

Mr. JONES. I have only ten minutes, and the gentleman is taking up my time.

Mr. HULICK. In your report nothing is said about fraud there. I will read it——

Mr. JONES. I can not yield for that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULICK. There is not a word said about fraud in the notice.

Mr. JONES. I decline to let the gentleman read the report of the committee or to show what the notice of contest contained in my time. I have only a moment of time remaining. The notice of contest is not printed in the report. The report does not undertake to print the notice, but the notice is set forth in extenso in the printed record.

Mr. HULICK. Here is what purports to be the exact notice in regard to Allen County, on page 15.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman must not interrupt me. The report is a very short one in view of the many and intricate questions involved in this case and the voluminous record that we had to examine.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, that whether you throw out Allen County entirely or whether you give Mr. Funston the benefit of the vote claimed by him in that county it makes no difference as to the general result. I submit, that if you throw out the deposition of Mr. Strickland and leave it out of consideration entirely, as the Committee on Elections did, it will not affect the result in any material respect. The frauds perpetrated by the friends of the contestee in the third and in the fifth precincts of Kansas City were so gross and so extensive and have been so clearly established by competent and convincing testimony that there is no shadow of doubt upon my mind that Mr. Moore, the contestant, was fairly and honestly elected. I surrender the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ONEIL of Massachusetts). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for seventeen minutes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of the time yet remaining to the contestant for the discussion of this case. My colleague on the committee [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] have stated this case so much better than I can possibly state it, that I feel there is not the slightest necessity for protracting the discussion longer. As the gentleman from Missouri well said, there are three great controlling questions or propositions in this case. I will, if I can, call the attention of the House back to what he so ably stated respecting these three controlling questions. The first is the question of fraud and conspiracy organized by the Republicans in Kansas City, in the county of Wyandotte, Kans.

I never heard it seriously disputed during all the progress of the examination of this case until this very day, but that there was a combined effort and conspiracy to put on the registration list false, fraudulent, and fictitious names to be used at the election in question then coming on. An examination of the report prepared for the minority by the very able and courteous gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] will show no serious denial that such a conspiracy existed.

It is a rule of common sense—for not being a great lawyer like my colleague from Indiana [Judge WAUGH] I will apply the rules of common sense—it is, I say, a rule of common sense that where the proof establishes the creation, organization, and existence of a conspiracy to do a certain unlawful act, and the unlawful act is done, it is presumable that the act was done because of the conspiracy and according to the plans and design of the conspiracy. The record in this case discloses very clearly that the conspiracy was formed and existed. It shows that the object and design of the conspiracy was to put false and fictitious names on the registration list to perpetrate a fraud on the election. It shows that these false and fictitious names were used by repeaters at the election in question for the purpose of perpetrating a fraud and an outrage upon the ballot box.

What party did it? It was the Republican party, the party to which the contestee belonged, and still belongs. No one casts a shadow of doubt or a breath of suspicion on the statement that the Republican party was the only party which organized that conspiracy and did whatever unlawful acts were done in pursuance of it. It has been said that the proof in this case has caused an abandonment of the idea of nearly 2,000 names having been put on the registration list by reason of this unlawful conspiracy. Nothing of the kind. There is no confession, admission, or denial but that to this day there remains that number of false, fraudulent, and fictitious names on that list. But it may be said, with some semblance of fairness and truth, that the proof in the case does not show that more than 400 persons voted in the false and fictitious names which had been placed on the registration list by reason of this conspiracy.

Well, if 400 persons or 100 persons voted in the names falsely placed on this false and fraudulent registration list, that is sufficient to maintain the case here submitted upon the part of the contestant. The contestee's returned plurality is only 81. I now leave this question of conspiracy, having said so much about it only as was needed to bring the minds of members back to the words of truth and wisdom which were uttered by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] on this subject. Next is the question respecting the third precinct of Kansas City, Kans. The contestee, speaking for himself, denies that any question affecting this precinct is in the record. I do not blame the contestee for so speaking; I do not blame him for traveling far beyond the record in this case.

I presume that I would do as he has done, were I placed in his situation. But the House should pause and consider whether it will act upon statements of his, dehors the record, or whether it will keep within the limits of the record. The notice of contest in this case states—

> Second, because in Wyandotte County there were large numbers of illegal votes cast for you, as follows: First precinct, 10; second precinct, 25; third precinct, 100.

There is the statement in the record that 100 illegal votes were cast in the third precinct. That is in the notice of contest. To this charge that 100 illegal votes were cast for contestee in the precinct in question, he replies in his answer, by saying:

> I deny your allegation in charge 2 of your notice to me, that a large number of illegal ballots were cast for me in Wyandotte County, as follows: * * * * third precinct, 100.

The issue is joined; and while perhaps it would have been better pleading to have set out more fully all the wrongs and outrages that took place at that precinct, yet here is enough charged to raise this question, and certainly enough is charged to raise it as against contestee's answer that has no standing here whatever, except by the grace of the committee and the grace of this House.

How is it in respect to this Third precinct? The record and discussion of this case show that there is not the slightest doubt but that the contestee was largely, severely scratched at that precinct, as he was at other precincts. The proof in this case shows that a certain negro officer used his official authority to drive away from the polls in certain precincts of that city adherents of the contestant who were handlers of his tickets at the polls because they were scratched tickets—because they had the name of Funston scratched off and the name of Moore written on. I call attention to this fact, and will make it applicable a little later on.

It is uncontradicted that the proof shows what I have stated—that there was an effort to drive from the polls the handlers of tickets with Mr. Funston's name erased and Mr. Moore's name written in the place of it. Let us look at this precinct—a precinct which as my friend has correctly said usually, if not always, gives a very large Democratic majority—more than 100—running up I believe sometimes to nearly 150. At this election after the polls had closed, and while the act of counting out the votes was taking place, as the tickets were read off, it was commented on by all the members of the board that "Old Man Funston" had been badly scratched at that precinct.

But, as has been said, there was a certain man there who kept tally of the count, who took charge of the return sheet which was to go to the county clerk. Not one of the officers of this board of election in their testimony placed the number of scratched tickets—tickets with Funston's name erased and Moore's name put in its stead—at less than 10; and some members of the board placed the number as high as from 50 to 60; others stated that the number ran along from 30 to 40. The returns, however, were made up and deposited in the clerk's office; and with a remarkable fitness of things for that locality, it was made to appear by the returns that Funston had run but 2 votes, I believe, behind the vote of the Presidential electors.

That result was accepted for a while as a correct report of the vote at that precinct. This contest came on. Inquiry was made as to whether that return was honest or fraudulent. The tickets of this precinct, whose custody by law was in the clerk's office, are called for. A Republican clerk holding that office reports that he has made search and can not find them. He goes back and makes another search, and again reports that he can not find them. Then comes a Mr. Carpenter, a Republican, closely allied with the people engaged in this monstrous and iniquitous business; he brings a package of tickets which had been broken open and lays it in the hands of this county clerk. He says that early in the morning when he rose he found it on his gate.

This package of tickets has been accurately described by my friend, Mr. DE ARMOND. A comparison of these tickets is made with the tally sheet made up by this scoundrel who went on the board of his own volition without taking an oath; and it is found that the tickets tally precisely with the tally sheet as made up by him. Why is this so? Because the truth is that scratched tickets were voted and went into the box, but when read off by this man they were read as if they were straight tickets.

To successfully carry out the intended fraud on the ballot box at this precinct the tickets in the box had to be tampered with, and enough scratched tickets had to be taken out and straight tickets substituted to make the ballots correspond with the count that this rascal had kept. This is the truth of the matter. This is the work of this rascal who imposed himself on the election board and who my friend from Virginia [Mr. JONES] says is a sleight of hand performer. I hardly know what that means. But at any rate this fellow had adroitness enough about him to steal out a lot of scratched tickets and substitute others for them.

The next matter to be considered is one that my friend, Mr. DE ARMOND, has also spoken of—the county of Allen. That county returned a majority for the contestee of 93—12 more than the plurality returned for him in the entire district. The law of the State of Kansas requires that the board of county canvassers, consisting of three members, shall meet at the county seat for the purpose of examining the precinct returns and making a canvass of them. This board of canvassers is the board of county commissioners.

It is the business and duty of this canvassing board to carefully look into the matter and see that it is all right. A tabulated statement of the correct vote should be made. The precinct returns were made to the clerk of Allen County pursuant to the law. The board of commissioners constituting the board of canvassers met pursuant to law, and that is the only lawful thing the board of commissioners did. I will call the attention of the House to the testimony of witnesses. The clerk who allowed this package of tickets to mysteriously disappear testified that the canvassing board did not personally inspect the work nor compare it with the returns as shown by the poll books. This is what he swore to. If the board did not do that what faith can be given to the returns?

Again he testified that the members of the canvassing board could not see the names and figures witness made from where they sat; that they absolutely saw nothing of these returns or what was being done with them. The witness, the county clerk, did not know whether the members of the board were present when he signed the chairman's name to the abstract of votes or not. It has been contended by some gentlemen on the other side that the name of the president of this board of county commissioners, one of the canvassing board, was properly subscribed to the abstract of votes. I will concede it, if gentlemen desire, because it does not help them in their case, although I think they are mistaken about it. The law of Kansas requires that they shall all sign the returns—not one, but all.

There was no such signing of these election returns. It is to authenticate the election return that the signatures are required. The signatures of the board are the witnesses who testify that the returns tell the truth. There is no testimony, oral or otherwise, that the returns from Allen County sent up to the capitol of the State of Kansas speak the truth, none whatever. So it must be conceded that the returns are void, absolutely so. They are not subscribed to or certified to by anybody.

This being so, shall the contestee still hold this seat in Congress? I say no.

Here is the law of Kansas on the subject of canvassing the vote:

SEC. 2687. On the Friday next following the election the county clerk and the commissioners of the county, or a majority of said commissioners, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, shall meet at the office of said county clerk and shall proceed to open the several returns which shall have been made to that office; and said commissioners shall determine the persons who have received the greatest number of votes in the county for the several county, district, and State offices, and members of the senate and house of representatives, Representative in Congress, and electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, * * * and such determination shall be reduced to writing, signed by said commissioners, and attested by the clerk, and shall be annexed to the abstract of votes given for such officers respectively, hereinafter provided for in section 41 [31] of this act.

E. M. Eckley testified that he was county clerk of Allen County, Kans.; that on November 11, 1892, the board of county commissioners met to canvass the vote cast at the general election of November 8, 1892; that they reduced the result to writing, but did not sign the same; that he, the witness, signed the name of the chairman of the canvassing board to the abstract of the vote; that he made out the abstract from the names and figures given him by the board; that the board did not give him any authority to sign their names; that the board did not personally inspect the work, nor compare it with the returns as shown by the poll-books; that the members of the board could not see the names and figures witness made from where they sat; that witness did not know whether the members of the board were present when he signed the chairman's name to the abstract.

Another reason why I believe these Allen County returns are unreliable and will not bear scrutinizing is this: Every man knows that where there is a failure to authenticate the returns of an election in the manner prescribed by law that other evidence may be resorted to to prove the truth of the returns. This was the contestee's home county. If these returns were all right he could have shown it by other evidence. The original precinct returns still on file in the clerk's office could have been produced and put in evidence. This was not done, and the fact that it was not done casts suspicion on the fairness of the returns made in Allen County.

The election in dispute is so permeated with fraud and dishonesty on the part of the party that contestee belongs to that no reliance——

The SPEAKER. The time fixed for the debate has expired, and the Clerk will report the resolutions offered by the committee.

The resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections were again read.

Mr. MCCALL. I offer as a substitute, Mr. Speaker, the resolutions presented by the minority of the committee.

The resolutions were read.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the substitute resolutions.

Mr. MCCALL. I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first resolution, submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts as a substitute for the resolutions offered by the Committee on Elections, on which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That H. L. Moore was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress from the Second Congressional district of Kansas, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to prevail.

Mr. MCCALL. I ask a division.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEFFER. I present the petition of Lewis C. Frye, of Los Angeles, Cal., and others, representing the United States Industrial Army now encamped near Washington City, praying for legislation in the interest of people who are unable to find employment at the hands of private citizens. In connection with the petition there is the draft of a bill which the petitioners ask to have enacted into law. The petition is very brief, and with the permission of the Senate I will read it so that all may have a clear understanding of what the petitioners want and why they ask for relief. It is addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, and is as follows:

The United States Industrial Army is composed of many thousands of unemployed American citizens, and represents, by general consent, millions of unemployed or partly employed and underpaid workingmen. They have naught but their ability to labor to provide for themselves and families, and the average wealth possessed by them would not purchase a decent coffin.

A portion of this army is now encamped near Washington, thousands more are on the way, and thousands now languish in jail who, from hunger, were driven to trespass on railroad property. For years they have peacefully and hopefully awaited for private and public enterprise to give them work, and their condition is now such that their loyalty to the laws of the land is being put to a very severe test, as witness the violent outbreaks that are becoming so alarmingly frequent, and are so ominous of catastrophe to the nation. Political liberty is a mockery where economic slavery exists.

This army is organized in the interests of peace, and apart from the borrowing of transportation in an emergency, it has been, and will continue to be, law-abiding, half-starved, and ragged as it is, thus showing to the world an example of patient endurance and determination that is unparalleled in history.

Had we had the time and facilities, we could have brought a ton's weight of petitions from the poverty-stricken masses.

They ask for immediate employment on public works at fair wages or else national assistance to supply their own wants by coöperative industry.

To have our leading industries nationalized, and the product of service to be furnished at cost.

Free coinage of silver and a legal-tender currency issued direct to the people.

To have the immigration of foreign laborers stopped until there is a demand for their labor, or until the serfdom of the wage-earner is abolished.

Therefore, as the hour of adjournment approaches and our needs are urgent, we, the undersigned, at the request of the army and the millions it represents, do respectfully petition your honorable body to pass the bill hereunto attached, or failing that, to pass some measure of immediate and temporary relief.

The petition is signed as follows:

LEWIS C. FRYE, Los Angeles, Cal.,
ARTHUR VINETTE, Los Angeles, Cal.,
THOS. GALVIN, Los Angeles, Cal.,
FRANK CANTWELL, Seattle, Wash.,
CHAS. L. KELLEY, San Francisco, Cal.,

ALLEN JENNINGS, Indianapolis, Ind.,
Advisory Board United States Industrial Army.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to state that I dissented in committee from that report. I desire, furthermore, to state that after a very full and thorough investigation by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, under the order of the Senate, of the question of dealing in options and futures, I have been confirmed in my opposition to that system of dealing, and in my opinion there ought to be legislation for the suppression of such dealing. My dissent is based solely upon what I regard as the inadequacy of the present bill to effect the reform intended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

A. P. GORMAN,
F. M. COCKRELL,
W. B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ALEX. M. DOCKERY,
J. R. WILLIAMS,
D. B. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

Mr. PEFFER. Before the report is acted upon, I wish to have the attention of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I did not understand, from the reading of the report, whether any agreement had been reached upon the application of the van-drivers and persons connected with the Metropolitan police, who had asked to have their wages increased.

Mr. GORMAN. I answer the Senator no. That matter was not open to the conference. There was no amendment made to the House bill by the Senate, and therefore that question could not be considered in the conference.

I will state to the Senator that when the bill was under consideration in the Senate that was a subject which we agreed to take up carefully in the preparation of the next District appropriation bill. I think there is a universal belief that injustice is being done to those persons, and we shall endeavor to correct it in the next District of Columbia appropriation bill. It is impossible to reach it now.

Mr. PEFFER. Is the Senator of opinion that anything can be done or will be done at this session?

Mr. GORMAN. I trust at the next session we shall be able to do what the Senator desires. At all events, I shall make an effort in that direction.

Mr. PEFFER. I proposed an amendment, which was ruled out on a point of order, very properly undoubtedly. Afterwards an amendment was proposed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that committee reported it favorably. While it was perhaps a little out of order, yet the amendment when reported was referred to the committee of conference. I had great hope that the committee would see fit to incorporate it in their report.

Mr. GORMAN. I will state to the Senator that it was impossible under the rules for the committee of conference to consider that subject, it not having been passed upon by either House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

SENATORIAL INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

Mr. GRAY. I rise to a question of privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I am instructed by the special committee appointed by order of the Senate on May 20, to make a unanimous report, and with the report to lay before the Senate all the evidence that has been taken by the committee.

I am also instructed by the committee to say in reference to the resolution of June 11 of this year, passed by the Senate, instructing the committee to make an investigation of certain charges against members of both Houses in regard to the construction of certain railways and charter privileges in the city of Washington, that no evidence, testimony, or any communication has been made to the committee upon the subject of that resolution. The committee, therefore, on this statement, ask to be discharged from further duty under the resolution of May 20.

I ask that the report may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLEN. In view of the fact that the committee has made a report, in which I concur, but which does not cover all the features of investigation I think it should cover, I present an additional report, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the additional report submitted by the Senator from Nebraska will be printed in connection with the report submitted by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LODGE. I desire on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] and myself, members of the special investigating committee, to file an additional report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the additional report filed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed to accompany the report of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did I understand the request to be that the committee be discharged from any further consideration of the resolution of investigation?

Mr. GRAY. That was the request.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object for the present. After the Senator from Delaware made the request, additional reports were presented by three members of the committee. I think before the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution the Senate ought to have an opportunity to read the three reports. If the Senator from Delaware makes no objection, I ask that action on his request may go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

JAMES WILLIAM ABERT.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report favorably and without amendment the bill (H. R. 2582) to authorize the appointment of James William Abert to the retired list of the Army.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint James William Abert to the Army of the United States, and to place him on the retired list thereof with the rank of major of engineers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2048) to authorize the appointment of James William Abert to the retired list of the Army, to report it adversely, and move that it be indefinitely postponed, as a similar bill has just been reported to and passed by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES B. STIVERS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 868) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers, to report it favorably and without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to the bill, who, I understand, desires action upon it.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Nebraska. A similar bill has twice passed the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks for the present consideration of the bill. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Charles B. Stivers, late captain in the Seventh United States Infantry, was summarily and erroneously dismissed the service on the 15th day of July, 1863, by Special Orders, No. 313, by order of the then Secretary of War, which order of dismissal, upon proof being made to the War Department that an injustice had been inadvertently done the said officer, was revoked by order of the Secretary of War on August 11, 1863, by Special Orders, No. 356, whereupon said Capt. Stivers was restored to his rank in the Army and continued in honorable and faithful service therein until December 30, 1864, when, by a proper order from the War Department, after due examination, on account of long and faithful service and physical disability, he was placed upon the retired list of the Army; and

Whereas the said Charles B. Stivers was continued upon said retired list from the said date of his retirement until June 1, 1890, when he was dropped from the same in pursuance of an order of the War Department made by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States (114 U. S. R., 619) to the effect that the revocation by the President by an order of dismissal of an officer of the Army did not restore him to his former position in the service, but that such restoration could only legally be effected by an act of Congress: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purpose of this act only, and only so far as they affect Charles B. Stivers; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in the exercise of his discretion and judgment, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint said Charles B. Stivers, late a captain in the Seventh United States Infantry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain in the Army of the United States in the infantry service, and to place him on the retired list of the Army as of the date of December 30, 1864, the retired list being thereby increased in number to that extent, with the pay of his grade and rank from said date the same as if he had never been considered out of the service since his original entrance therein; such retired pay, however, having been heretofore duly and continuously received by said Charles B. Stivers up to the 1st day of June, 1890, the same shall only be due and payable to him hereafter from the date of the passage of this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not expect to prevent the passage of bills for the appointment of officers of the Government by act of Congress, but I do take occasion to say that, in my opinion, they are clearly unconstitutional. I make that remark about the pending bill in which the Senator from Virginia is interested and the bill which last passed the Senate.

It is, in my opinion, an absolute invasion of the powers of the Executive, of the power of appointment by the President of the United States, for Congress to undertake to make by statute officers of the United States. I think it is clear beyond all possibility of doubt, and at some time I hope that the passage of unconstitutional acts of this kind by the American Congress will cease.

Mr. MANDERSON. This bill and the one passed a few minutes ago by the Senate are certainly not open to the objection made by the Senator from New Hampshire. The bill is in the exact form in which such bills have been presented from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate for many years.

It is no direction to the President of the United States. It is no effort on the part of Congress to usurp executive power. It is not the exercise of any power of appointment, which, of course, does not vest in Congress. The language of such bills and the language of the pending measure is that the President is hereby authorized, in the exercise of his discretion and judgment, to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint such a man as captain or whatever the office may be. It seems to me that very conclusively answers the objection made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Now, as to this particular bill I desire to say that I am as much opposed as a man can be to any inflation of the retired list of the Army of the United States. It is already heavy, and no man should go upon it unless his case is one of very great merit. This case is like others reported from the Committee on Military Affairs; and let me say in passing that the committee weighs the evidence in all these cases with very great care. I do not believe there is a committee of this body which gives more attention to the details of cases of this character than the Committee on Military Affairs.

The facts in regard to this particular man are, that being in the service of the United States during the war as a captain of the Seventh United States Infantry, by misapprehension of facts—indeed, I think it was a mistake as to the personality of the man—he was summarily dismissed the service. A very short time afterwards, I think within a few days, the blunder of the department was called to the attention of the War Department and of President Abraham Lincoln, and immediately, by order of the President, and almost apologetically, reciting the mistake of facts, Capt. Stivers was restored to the Army. He continued in the service during the war, and in the regular Army after the war, until he was regularly retired by reason of disability.

Mr. HUNTON. He was wounded in the service.

Mr. MANDERSON. He was wounded in the service, I believe, also; but that is a mere incident which may happen to any soldier and does not affect his merit.

The fact is that in 1890, because of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which declared that the President did not have the power thus to restore even where a mistake had occurred, but that he must nominate and the party be confirmed by the Senate, Capt. Stivers was dropped from the retired list of the Army.

There is no question about it but that it is a case of very exceptional merit. He is now aged and feeble, as the result of exposure and wounds received, and this is simply an effort on the part of Congress to give authorization to the President of the United States, if in his discretion he sees fit so to do, to nominate him, and, if confirmed by the Senate, to appoint him.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to say, it endeavors to do what President Lincoln earnestly desired to do and thought he had done.

Mr. CHANDLER. No doubt this is a meritorious case, but we simply violate the Constitution in order to do justice to this man. An act of Congress which creates an office and names a private citizen in the act to be appointed to that office is an unconstitutional invasion of the executive function. It makes no difference, I take occasion to say to the Senator from Nebraska, whether the language is that the President is authorized to do it, or empowered to do it, or invested with discretion to do it, or whether it says he shall do it. The invasion stands upon the face of the act open, palpable, and inexcusable.

I do not propose to occupy the time of the Senate at this late day in arguing this proposition of law, which can be found laid down in various discussions of the subject in times past. I simply wish to put myself upon record briefly as protesting against a construction of the right of Congress to so legislate as to create an office, name a private citizen for the office, and virtually compel the President of the United States to appoint that private citizen to the office. It can not be done constitutionally, notwithstanding the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] are both upon the floor at the same time to insist that it can be done.

Mr. MANDERSON. I was on the floor simply for the purpose of interrupting the Senator from New Hampshire to correct a misapprehension that he is under. These bills, being approved by the President of the United States, become a law. As I say they merely give authorization. They give discretionary power to the President, and the fact is that the President of the United States in one instance at least, and I think in others, has declined to make the appointment.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, he has declined to do so several times.

Mr. MANDERSON. Perhaps several times. One instance I remember particularly where President Harrison, notwithstanding the authorization by Congress, said he did not believe the case was one of merit, and declined to appoint the officer whom he was permitted to appoint. It is not the creation of an office. By act of Congress of the United States the retired list of the Army is limited to 400. Bills of this character simply say that it shall be increased by one for the purpose of the act if the President sees fit to make the increase. That is all there is of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. And that the increase shall be limited to A B, a private citizen of the United States.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the President sees fit.

Mr. CHANDLER. The vice is right there, and the fact that Presidents have, in particular cases, wanted private individuals to be put into these offices, makes the custom which has grown up none the less a vicious one. A blow was struck at the custom at one time and I thought it had ceased; but it seems it is now in full blast and that we are to go on hereafter passing acts of Congress to create particular individual officers of the Federal Government under the President's power of appointment which, I respectfully continue to submit, can not be constitutionally done.

Mr. HUNTON. I congratulate the Senator from New Hampshire upon his zeal in defense of the Constitution, but it is a little singular to my mind that he should raise a constitutional point just here when he opposes the action of the Senate and House of Representatives for the last twenty years, and the action of four or five different Presidents of the United States. Whatever confidence I may have in the constitutional learning of the Senator from New Hampshire, I prefer to take the combined wisdom of the two Houses of Congress and four or five Presidents of the United States.

In regard to the point the Senator makes, I will state that this is not in any sense of the word a law appointing Charles B. Stivers to the Army and putting him on the retired list. The only object of the proposed law is to increase the retired list by one, and that one is to be Charles B. Stivers. That is not, so far, interfering with the power of appointment at all.

Mr. PALMER. If the President determines to appoint him, he will be appointed.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir. That is not controlling the President in his action at all. But the law, having limited the retired list to 400, Charles B. Stivers can not be appointed by the President, no matter how much he might wish to appoint him unless the retired list shall be increased by the number of one.

And the Congress of the United States, by the passage of the bill, decides that the retired list shall be increased by one, provided the President in his discretion shall see proper to appoint to the position in the Army and place upon the retired list Mr. Charles B. Stivers. A similar bill has passed the Senate twice; it has passed the Military Affairs Committee certainly as often as twice, and nobody has ever seen a constitutional objection in the case except the strict constructionist from New Hampshire.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, this is not a new case. What we propose in the pending bill has been done many times by Congress before and since the famous Fitz John Porter case. The argument made by the Senator from New Hampshire was then made by many Senators with very great vigor. I confess that I myself sustained it; but I find that before and since that time Congress has asserted its right to enlarge the powers of the President, for that is what is proposed to be done in this case. It is no restriction, no interference, no embarrassment. Here is a man who can not be assured in the place in the Army which he held for twenty or thirty years without an act of Congress. It is very extraordinary if the Federal Government may commit an act of the grossest and most cruel injustice, and the Congress of the United States and the executive department together can find no possible way to remedy it.

The record of this gentleman is entirely honorable. There is no fault to be found with his service. He was out of the Army by an error of judgment. Mr. Lincoln, as he did in one or two other cases, where we had provided acts of Congress to cure the defect, endeavored to restore him by revoking the order of dismissal or discharge. The President was convinced that there was something wrong about it and endeavored to restore Capt. Stivers to the Army, and he supposed he had done so.

The person in question went back into the service, stayed there many years, was for a long time upon the retired list, and then a judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States declared that when an officer was once legally out of the service it was quite impossible for the President to restore him by revoking the order which discharged him; that it was an act completed, and he could not be restored except by new authority from Congress. So Congress says that the President may, in his discretion, nominate and appoint so and so to a certain position. It says that he may, in his discretion, do it. It removes the bar that stands in the way of doing justice.

The Fitz-John Porter case was fought out to the bitter end, and the power of Congress to pass such a law was affirmed by a large majority of both Houses, and I have quit fighting it. I have taken advantage of it to assist in some acts of obvious justice and mercy, and I shall adhere to the doctrine that we have a right to enlarge the powers of the President and that he may do just as seems to him best. It does not point out a person whom he shall appoint, but it enlarges the list of persons whom he may appoint.

Mr. MANDERSON. A bill for the relief of Capt. Charles B. Stivers passed Congress in 1890. It declared that the finding of a retiring board in his case was a legal and valid retirement, and that therefore he was entitled to his pay as a retired officer. The bill went to President Harrison, and he vetoed it, because he said it was the exercise of judicial power.

Mr. HUNTON. I think the Senator from Nebraska is mistaken in saying that it was a bill. It was a joint resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. It may have been a joint resolution, but it is immaterial whether it was a bill or a joint resolution. The President vetoed it because he said it was a usurpation of judicial power by the President of the United States which he could not approve. That very excellent lawyer, standing almost at the head of the bar of the United States when he went into the Presidential office, concludes his veto message in this language:

> The relief should have taken the form usual in such cases, which is to authorize the appointment of the officer to a place made for him on the retired list.

I submit that to the Senator from New Hampshire as very excellent authority upon the constitutional question which he has raised in this case.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope we shall now have a vote on the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2119) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

NORTH CAROLINA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. JARVIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 6542, a local bill, changing the line between the eastern and western judicial districts of North Carolina.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, line 8, before the word "said," to insert "either of;" and after the word "said" to strike out "western district, in" and insert "counties for;" so as to read:

> That the counties of Person, Durham, Chatham, and Moore, and Richmond, now constituting a part of the western judicial district of North Carolina, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and made part of the eastern judicial district of North Carolina; but all crimes and offenses heretofore committed in either of said counties for which the defendants have been bound over, shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 2, after the words "North Carolina," to insert "as herein constituted;" and in line 5, after the words "each year," to insert:

> and at the city of Wilmington on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; and at the city of Newbern on the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; and at Elizabeth City on the third Monday in April and October of each year

So as to make the section read:

> SEC. 2. That the sessions of the district courts of the United States for the eastern district of North Carolina as herein constituted shall begin and be held at the city of Raleigh on the fourth Monday of May and first Monday of December of each year, and at the city of Wilmington on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; and at the city of Newbern on the fourth Monday in April and October of each year; and at Elizabeth City on the third Monday in April and October of each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 4, after the word "fourth," to strike out "Sunday" and insert "Monday;" so as to make the section read:

> SEC. 3. That the regular terms of the circuit court shall be held at Raleigh on the fourth Monday in May and first Monday in December in each year, and at Wilmington on the first Monday after the fourth Monday in April and October of each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add a new section in the following words:

> SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect on and after October 15, 1894.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ELIZA B. PEIRCE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am authorized by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3858) to pension Mrs. Eliza B. Peirce, widow of Charles Peirce, of New Bedford, Mass., to report it favorably without amendment. As the bill proposes to pension a very aged and destitute woman, and it will take but a moment to consider it, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension rolls the name of Eliza B. Peirce, widow of Charles Peirce, late of the ship Edward, Mexican war, and allow her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HILL. I am directed by the Committee on Immigration, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5246) providing for the inspection of immigrants by United States consuls, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

At the same time I present to the Senate a communication from the Department of State upon the subject of this proposed legislation and also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury. I ask that the bill and substitute, together with the two communications, be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to say that the bill as reported by the committee as a substitute was drawn at the Treasury Department. It contains very severe provisions against the coming of anarchists to this country. I consented pro forma to the report of that bill as a substitute for the bill which came from the House of Representatives and which requires consular certificates for persons intending to immigrate to this country, in order that the whole subject might be brought before the Senate upon the consideration of the House bill, but reserving to myself the right to oppose the substitute and to advocate the passage at this time of the original House bill. I think that at the very earliest opportunity at the present session the Senator from New York, who is chairman of the committee, should call up the House bill and the proposed substitute with a view to securing legislation on the subject before the adjournment of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

GEORGE B. COSBY.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of George B. Cosby, to report it without amendment. The bill passed the House of Representatives without opposition. There is considerable urgency in having action upon it by the Senate, as the applicant is threatened with a suit at law by the Government. I therefore ask that the bill be considered at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to credit George B. Cosby, late a first lieutenant in the Second Cavalry, United States Army, with $1,358, being the amount of his official draft in favor of John T. Shaaf, late a lieutenant in the United States Army, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, La., on or about March 31, 1860, the check not having been honored or paid for the want of funds, occasioned by payment of forged checks by the assistant treasurer, for which Cosby was in no way responsible.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECORATION OF SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7494) disposing of four condemned cannon of the Navy, to report it without amendment. It will only take a minute to pass the bill, and I ask that it be considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to supply the Grand Army post of Sac City, Iowa, with four condemned cannon for use in decorating the pedestal of the soldiers' monument in Sac City, Iowa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY ROAD IN TEXAS.

Mr. BATE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7419) for the construction of a military road from the city of El Paso to Fort Bliss, Tex., to report it without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill for consideration now.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate, when the military reservation known as "Old Fort Bliss" shall have been sold by virtue of an act approved March 1, 1890, so much of the receipts therefrom as may be necessary, not to exceed $4,000, to the construction of a military road between the city of El Paso, Tex., and New Fort Bliss, Tex.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE and others addressed the Chair.

Mr. COCKRELL. I give notice that I shall be compelled to object to the consideration of any more bills upon reports made this morning.

Mr. FRYE. I wish the Senator would withdraw his objection for about two minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall not be able to withdraw it to-day.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will not make the report until to-morrow morning.

Mr. TELLER. If the morning business is through, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. COCKRELL. I insist upon only routine morning business being transacted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAREY introduced a bill (S. 2273) to provide for the payment of certain claims for compensation for publishing advertisements of lists of lands in the Territory of Oklahoma, opened to settlement by proclamation of the President April 19, 1892; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLEN introduced a bill (S. 2274) to regulate the military and naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 2275) granting a pension to Elizabeth New, widow of Jethrow New; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRICE introduced a bill (S. 2276) for the relief of John C. Seltzer, late postmaster, Shenandoah, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

STATISTICS OF WAGES OF LABOR.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to offer a resolution. I think there will be no objection to its immediate consideration, and in view of that fact I wish to state what it is. It is a resolution to ask the Committee on the Census to inquire and report whether there is any good reason for doubting the accuracy of the published statements of the Superintendent of the Census in relation to the wages of labor. I am informed and believe from a very cursory examination that the figures as given by the Superintendent for 1890 show such a state of wages as compared with those of 1880 that the increase is out of all proper proportion; and in order that the matter may be looked into, I ask that the resolution I offer may be adopted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire and report whether there is reasonable ground for doubt concerning the accuracy of the conclusions of the Superintendent of the Census, in relation to the average wages of persons employed in the mechanical and manufacturing industries as published in the second volume of the Compendium of the Eleventh Census.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 1st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1209) to regulate enlistments in the Army of the United States;

An act (S. 1426) to provide a register for the steamer Goldsworthy; and

An act (S. 79) to authorize a corrected patent to be issued for the donation land claim of Wheelock Simmons and wife.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message also announced that the following acts having been presented to the President July 20, 1894, for his approval, and not having been returned by him to the house of Congress in which they originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, have become laws without his approval:

An act (S. 104) for the relief of Gen. Napoleon J. T. Dana;

An act (S. 1513) for the relief of Maj. Gen. George S. Greene; and

An act (S. 322) to place Dunbar R. Ransom on the retired list of the Army.

DOMINION COAL COMPANY, OF NOVA SCOTIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CHANDLER, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee appointed to investigate the charges of bribery against Senators be instructed to inquire into the facts connected with the organization and history of the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such company was formed or is being conducted by reason of any assurances that the tariff duty on coal shall be repealed by Congress; and if so, to ascertain who gave such assurances; and whether or not any officer of the Government or any member of Congress is or was interested in said company; and what action, if any, has been taken by any person in fulfillment of said assurances.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the facts which have come to my knowledge, which justify and seem to require the passage of this resolution of investigation, are mainly contained in the prospectus of the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, a copy of which I hold in my hand.

My proposition is that there is sufficient to justify an investigation contained in the prospectus itself. It was issued by Kidder, Peabody & Co., of Boston, and appears to have been dated in February, 1893. The outstanding capitalization of the company is stated as follows:

Capitalization of the company outstanding:
Bonds	$1,500,000
Preferred stock	1,500,000
Common stock	15,000,000

Then the following statement is made:

One million five hundred thousand additional bonds and $1,500,000 additional preferred stock are reserved in the Treasury for the future needs of the company.

So we have a corporation of $21,000,000 formed in February, 1893, or exploited in February, 1893, for the development of Nova Scotia coal mines. I have been informed, and have no doubt, that the options upon the mining properties which were to constitute the property of this Dominion Coal Company were bargained for in 1892, previous to the Presidential election, but that the final arrangements were concluded after the Presidential election, and the prospectus of February, 1893, then issued.

The officers of the company are Henry M. Whitney, of Boston, president; John S. McLennan, of Montreal, treasurer; F. S. Pearson, of Boston, chief engineer; David McKeen, of Glace Bay, Cape Breton, resident manager.

The directors are Henry F. Dimock, of New York; Hugh McLennan, of Montreal; F. S. Pearson, of Boston; W. B. Ross, Q. C., of Halifax; Sir Donald A. Smith, K. C. M. G., of Montreal; W. C. Van Horne, of Montreal; Henry M. Whitney, of Boston; Alfred Winsor, of Boston; and Robert Winsor, of Boston.

The trustees and transfer agents of the bonds are the New England Trust Company; the transfer agents of the stocks are the American Loan and Trust Company, and here is the date of the prospectus, "Boston, February 18, 1893."

There is in the New York World of Monday, July 30, a special to the World from Boston, Mass., of July 29, which gives the officers of the Dominion Coal Company substantially as I have stated them, and states that "the principal mines at and near Sydney acquired by the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, were the Glace Bay Company, in which Frank Jones held some stock," etc. Then the World proceeds to enumerate the other properties. I find that the prospectus recites that Mr. Schneider examined the books of the Little Glace Bay, Gowrie, Caledonia, and International Companies.

So it seems that a distinguished citizen of my own State, well known in political and social circles, Mr. Frank Jones, is a member of the syndicate which was projected prior to the Presidential election, and which entered into the full performance of its functions after the Presidential election, issuing its prospectus in February, 1893, for the sale of a portion of its stock.

It appears that nearly all the common stock is to be what is called watered stock. The company, wishing to sell four and a half million dollars of its securities, offers for $1,050 to give $500 of bonds, $500 of preferred stock, and $500 of common stock; that is to say, the bonds and the preferred stock at par, and the $500 common stock at $50, or $10 a share. So the common stock of $15,000,000 would be watered stock, so to speak, up to the amount of $13,500,000. It appears by the prospectus that all the stock is regarded as paid up and nonassessable under the laws of Nova Scotia.

I find in the World that—

> Of this stock President Whitney took 30,000 shares, for which he paid $10 a share. The other directors also got in on the ground tier.

There remains, of course, the $13,500,000 to be disposed of at $10 a share or placed in the course of the business of the projectors wherever it will do the most good to the company.

I now come to the peculiarity of this prospectus which led me to offer the resolution of investigation. This is evidently a scheme which is to go forward only in case of legislation of a certain character by the Congress of the United States. The whole gist and gravamen of this company's plan is the condition that by reason of the success of tariff reform in this country, or the success of some other idea, or the election to office of some President or some Congress, the duty on coal of 75 cents a ton is to be removed, so that this coal company can make money.

I have also been furnished, by the kindness of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], with the prospectus of the Broad Cove Coal Company, Limited, who propose to exploit mines at Cape Breton, in Nova Scotia, the Dominion of Canada. This is either a rival organization or a fellow organization of the Dominion Coal Company, and it proceeds upon the same fundamental condition, that success is to be given to the commercial venture by the removal by the Congress of the United States of the existing duty of 75 cents per ton upon coal. In the prospectus of the Broad Cove Company I find the following statement:

> Thus it will be seen that Broad Cove coal can be delivered alongside in Boston for $1.48 per ton less than coal from Newport News, Va., United States, and 61 cents less than for any other mine in Nova Scotia, with the duty on. Which tariff will be reduced if not removed entirely.

The prospectus has a blue hand printed so as to call the special attention of persons who desire to invest in the stock of this company to this paragraph, "which tariff will be reduced if not removed entirely."

The paragraph in the Dominion Coal Company's prospectus which gives character to the whole proceeding and shows the motive of the organization of this company, is as follows:

> Should the United States duty of 75 cents per ton be removed, it seems evident that this company will find a large market on the New England seaboard, for which its position at tide water would enable it to compete on advantageous terms.

Now, here is beyond all doubt, without going outside of the prospectus, the basis upon which this company was organized. It is the idea upon which this company is being managed today. It is a corporation organized with $15,000,000 of common stock, which it is apparent is only to be paid for, if paid for at all, to the extent of a million and a half dollars, which stock is subject to be distributed in all directions for any purpose which the managers of the company may conclude to be a wise one.

Mr. President, I repeat that this company ought to be investigated upon the facts which I have stated. If the Congress of the United States has before it a tariff bill, and a great $21,000,000 corporation is organized and bases the work of its organization, the function of its organization, the prosperity of its organization upon the removal of a duty by the passage of that tariff bill, I say this is a company which the Congress of the United States engaged in considering the tariff bill can afford to watch.

Mr. President, we can not avoid looking to see what any company is doing, whether it is the Dominion Coal Company or the Broad Cove Coal Company, that holds its securities ready by the million to hand out to persons to whom it chooses to assign them in order to influence the action of the Congress of the United States in removing the duty upon coal.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not surprised that the Senator from New York rises.

Mr. HILL. I understood the suggestion of the Senator to be that he wanted to watch this coal company. There is no objection to that, I suppose, on the part of anybody; but his resolution seems to intimate something further, namely, that we should investigate its affairs.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will see, as I proceed, exactly to what extent I propose to impute motives to the advocates of free coal. I shall not say that every advocate of free coal has been influenced by the Dominion Coal Company.

Mr. GRAY. You had better not.

Mr. CHANDLER. Far be it from me to say that; but I say that when you have a coal company with $21,000,000 of stock organized upon the fundamental proposition that the duty on coal shall be removed, it is time for Congress to see what that coal company is doing, and to protect the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] when he argues for free coal in this Chamber from having any seductive or improper influences put around him for the purpose of influencing his action in this Chamber. [Laughter.] And if any officer of the Government, be he high or low, great or small, is in danger of being influenced in his public action by this $21,000,000 of stock and bonds conveniently at hand, I say the Congress should investigate, not for the purpose of doing injury to any human being, but for the purpose of removing all good men from suspicion, and of exposing the bad men, if there are any in this city with any of this stock and bonds in their hands, and of driving them from the Capitol, as we ought to drive all men who are engaged with money in their hands in attempting to influence the legislation of this pure and upright Senate.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I notice that the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire—I was not in the Senate yesterday when it was offered—directs that the special committee appointed to investigate the charges of bribery against Senators, be instructed to inquire into the facts connected with the matter of which he has been speaking. I should feel perhaps some hesitation in saying and doing anything about that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Did the Senator understand that I had finished my remarks.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought he took his seat.

Mr. CHANDLER. Oh, no; I have only begun.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator acted as if he had closed. I am sorry I misunderstood him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg pardon of the Senator. I always finish my sentences separately, or endeavor to do so.

Mr. GRAY. I say the Senator acted as if he had closed, and I beg his pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I may have so acted by finishing one sentence; but I have not yet attained the happy faculty, which was possessed in such an eminent degree by the former Senator from New York, Mr. Evarts, and is possessed by some Senators I now see, of getting all of my ideas in one sentence. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAY. We all wish you could.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I could do that, I would; but I am obliged to give the Senate my views upon this resolution in installments, and I shall now proceed to the second installment.

Mr. President, while I hold the Senate ought to investigate the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, by reason of the facts appearing upon the face of the prospectus, it is useless to disguise the fact or to omit to notice that there have been suggested scandals in connection with this company, and that the names of public officials have been bruited about in connection with this company; yet, Mr. President, I do not intend to use any names of public officials, because if the Senate will pass this resolution and make this investigation all the facts will be made apparent, and if no public official holds stock or bonds of this company, and if no member of Congress holds stock or bonds of this company or has any interest therein, no injustice will be done to anyone; while if names are now mentioned in the Senate injustice may be done.

Mr. GRAY. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator whether he does not think that if he has these grounds of suspicion, which would authorize him in offering and pressing a resolution like this, as to certain Government officials, he ought to mention their names; because, if he will allow me, that is a matter which has been bruited in the press of the country for sometime by those who are endeavoring to defeat tariff legislation in the Senate, and has come to the attention of the parties whose names have been mentioned in one way or another, and thus has drawn from those parties—I do not know that it has drawn from members of the Government—specific denials of the truth of many things which have been stated about this coal company.

I think if the Senator desires an investigation, he ought to mention the names of any officers of the Government to whom he thinks suspicion is directed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I prefer to make my speech myself.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator a question, whether he does not think he owes it to the Senate and to the country to mention the names?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Delaware shall mention any names he chooses to bring into this debate. I say that I have no knowledge, but I have a suspicion.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New Hampshire says he is perfectly willing the Senator from Delaware should mention names. Whenever I mention that there is suspicion against any public officer or Senator I shall mention the name.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has his own way of doing things.

Mr. GRAY. I make no innuendoes.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Delaware way is not always the New Hampshire way.

Mr. GRAY. The Delaware way is a pretty good way, and I prefer the Delaware way.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg pardon of the Senator. I will make this proposition to him, if he wants to introduce names into this debate. The New York World article of July 30, in its special from Boston of July 29, states that a thorough investigation has been made by the World correspondent into the Dominion Coal Company, and thereupon the World exempts from any connection with this company two high officials of the United States and one eminent citizen who is not now an official of the United States.

If the Senator wants to bring names into the debate, let him send for the World of July 30 and read the acquittal by this Democratic organ of those two officials and one distinguished citizen from any connection with the Dominion Coal Company. For myself, I have little reason to believe that they are connected with it, except what grows out of my suspicions of every conclusion to which the New York World ever comes.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New Hampshire has made a proposition. I merely want to say that the Senator from Delaware does not care to take refuge behind an article in the New York World or any other newspaper. If he thinks an article is sufficient to ground an imputation of suspicion against any officer or any Senator, he will say so, and that, I think, the Senator has characterized as the Delaware way, which I believe to be a pretty good way.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator suspect that any official of the United States is connected with this coal company?

Mr. GRAY. When I do, I will say so, and not stand here and talk about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator suspect anybody?

Mr. GRAY. I have answered the Senator. If he is not satisfied with that answer, he will have to go without one.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not suspect any one?

Mr. GRAY. No; I do not suspect anyone.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator says when he does suspect anyone, he will mention the name.

Mr. GRAY. That means I do not suspect anyone.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is unsuspicious, while I am suspicious, and I will take the liberty of conducting myself as a suspicious man, and not as the unsuspicious Senator from Delaware conducts himself.

Mr. President, there is one name in connection with this Dominion Coal Company which I will mention, and that is the name of Mr. John E. Russell, of Massachusetts. I do not know whether he is Governor Russell or not. I mix up these Russells. There is John E. Russell and William E. Russell, and one of them has been governor of Massachusetts, I forget which, but this is John E. Russell. Is he the governor of Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. He is the one who ran for governor and was defeated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; I had forgotten. William E. Russell is the one who ran for governor and was elected?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. In order that no injustice may be done to an ex-governor of Massachusetts, let it be borne in mind that it is Mr. John E. Russell, who, as I understand, avows connection with this Dominion Coal Company; who is an avowed participant in the prospective profits of the Dominion Coal Company, which is to make the great fortunes set out in this prospectus from the removal of the tariff duty of 75 cents a ton on coal.

A few days ago a New York paper—I think it was the Sun—if it was not the Sun, it was some other paper; and if I have the name of the paper wrong the Senator from Delaware, who reads all the papers, will correct me and name the right paper—stated that Mr. John E. Russell came to Washington to give counsel and advice to President Cleveland. The President had written a letter without addressing it to anybody in particular.

He had dated it July 2, and he had kept it as a sort of stock in trade of dynamite; held in hand, ready to be thrown at some convenient opportunity. Thereupon the President, about a week or ten days after this date, found himself in company with Mr. John E. Russell, with Mr. Don M. Dickinson, of Michigan, and with some other kitchen-cabinet adviser—I do not now remember the name—and at the consultation this letter was submitted, and the question was discussed whether it should be made public or should not be made public; and it was then decided, so the story went, that the letter should be addressed to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. WILSON. It was so addressed; it met the approval of this little conclave which gathered around the President, was sent to Mr. WILSON, and in due course of time, after an agonizing birth of some sort—who was the accoucheur we do not know—it saw the light one day, to the consternation of the world, the surprise of the House of Representatives, and to the dismay of every Senator in the Chamber, and particularly the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. President, I understand that Mr. John E. Russell, the representative of the Dominion Coal Company in that conference and about the hotels of this city and on the cars coming here and on the cars going away from here, was loud in his declaration that the President ought to plant himself impregnably upon the doctrine of the Democratic party, that we must have free coal for New England.

Far be it from me to say that Mr. Russell was not honest and sincere in his proposed advocacy of the great political principle of free raw material of the Democratic party to which he belongs. He undoubtedly thought that it was good policy for the President then and there to strike a blow for free coal, to protect the grand principle of free raw material for the Democratic party, and to carry out the expectations of the Dominion Coal Company, of which Mr. Russell was a representative and in the profits of which he was to be a participant.

But notwithstanding all this, it seems to me that Mr. John E. Russell, as an adviser of the President in reference to the removal of the duty on coal, will bear watching and investigating, and I respectfully submit to the Senate that the facts which I have already stated not only justify, but require an investigation such as the resolution proposes.

Mr. President, there have been scandals enough in connection with this Congress to require that the Senate of the United States shall set about removing them. We have had a committee for the purpose of removing any scandal which surrounds the Senate in connection with the sugar trust. The Senator from Delaware, the unsuspicious and confiding and trusting Senator from Delaware, who believes in the integrity of all men until the contrary is proved by overwhelming evidence, was put in charge of the committee to vindicate the integrity of the Senate and to assist in repelling, if the proof would permit, the sugar-trust scandals resting upon the Senate.

I submit that we should go further, and that we should investigate every organization made for money profits which it may be claimed by anybody has been surrounding this Capitol and filling this city with lobby agents to influence tariff legislation.

Consider, Mr. President, for a moment the question of the one-eighth differential, the one-eighth donation to the sugar trust, the president of which, Mr. Havemeyer, has admitted that the company pours out its money like water in order to influence political parties.

This sugar trust has been able so far to secure the retention in the tariff bill of the differential duty of one-eighth of 1 per cent upon refined sugar. All attempts to strike it out have failed, all motions to get it out have been voted down. There it is in the bill, and, if current rumors are correct, the Senate conferees say that there it shall remain, no matter how overwhelmingly the House of Representatives may demand that it shall be excluded and notwithstanding thirty-two members of the Senate, being half of those voting, have voted that it ought to go out, and notwithstanding, I regret to say, the thirty-second vote against striking it out was given by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who, after the most scathing denunciation of the sugar trust which has been uttered in this Chamber or elsewhere, meekly bowed in submission to the decree of the Democratic sugar caucus, and gave a vote against an instruction to the conferees to recede from the differential, which instruction only three days before he had introduced into the Senate and had made an eloquent and forcible speech in its favor.

Mr. President, when such conditions as this exist, when we see that this one-eighth differential, against which the House of Representatives is almost unanimous, and against which there is at least 1 majority in the Senate, if the Senators vote as they feel, and against which I believe there is 10 majority in the Senate—when we see this differential in behalf of Mr. Henry O. Havemeyer and his associates fastened upon the tariff legislation, so that there is to be no tariff legislation at this Congress unless the sugar trust have this advantage, I say it is time to investigate the sugar trust in earnest, and it is time to exhibit to the full light of day all the testimony which has been taken by the committee appointed to investigate the subject, and it is also time for us to investigate the Dominion Coal Company and the Broad Cove Coal Company and the National Lead Company. All of them, I think, should be investigated, including every one of those companies who, with their millions of watered stock ready to give away, are surrounding Congress and pressing home their iniquitous plans upon the representatives of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I have spoken somewhat vehemently on this subject, but I hope that I am influenced by the proper spirit. I trust that Senators will believe that a due regard for the permanent dignity and honor of the Senate requires this investigation. I recur naturally and frequently to the language of President Cleveland.

When one is tired and weary and hard worn—as we now are, having been in session nearly one whole year, brought here a year ago on the 7th day of this month by the distinguished President—he longs to seize hold, if he can, of some principle, of some great idea for his guidance.

Some great writer, I do not remember who, but such a one as the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] or the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is in the habit of quoting to us, says: "Give me a great thought that I may refresh myself therewith." So I turn for a great thought to the President of the United States, who says in his message of December 4, 1893:

> In my great desire for the success of this measure I can not restrain the suggestion that its success can only be attained by means of unselfish counsel on the part of the friends of tariff reform and as a result of their willingness to subordinate personal desires and ambitions to the general good.

Upon this noble idea, Mr. President, we may take our stand, and brush aside all these vampires which arise from the purlieus of the sugar trust and of the Dominion Coal Company. We may rest secure in our rectitude and our greatness, as reflected from that magnificent man in the White House, who always stands upon principle, who sacrifices himself upon every occasion when duty calls him, and who always subordinates personal ambitions to the public good. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, unless some Senator desires to debate the resolution further I move to lay it on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion for a moment so that I may make an amendment of the resolution, and then he can renew his motion.

Mr. HILL. I think my motion had better be passed upon now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say to the Senator that I desire, instead of keeping the present committee any longer in tribulation, to substitute a special committee for the committee to investigate the bribery of Senators.

Mr. HILL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. GRAY. Let the resolution provide for "a special committee" instead of "the special committee."

Mr. CHANDLER. I will modify the resolution so that it will read:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to inquire into the facts, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution will be modified as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I hope the Senator from New York will not renew his motion.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed to inquire into the facts connected with the organization and history of the Dominion Coal Company, Limited, of Nova Scotia, for the purpose of ascertaining whether such company was formed or is being conducted by reason of any assurances that the tariff duty on coal shall be repealed by Congress; and, if so, to ascertain who gave such assurances; and whether or not any officer of the Government or any member of Congress is or was interested in said company; and what action, if any, has been taken by any person in fulfillment of such assurances.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as no one seems inclined to debate this question further, I shall in a moment renew my motion.

I simply desire to say that nothing definite has been stated here which would justify entering seriously upon any investigation such as is proposed. There is no charge of any kind or character made against any official of the Government, any member of Congress, or anyone else in any tangible form or shape; and I think we have enough on our hands here, on the 2d day of August, without entering upon any such investigation. For that reason, I renew my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] that the resolution be laid upon the table. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" appear to have it.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded? [A pause.] Not a sufficient number of Senators have seconded the demand, and the yeas and nays are not ordered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New York to lay the resolution on the table. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I now ask unanimous consent, in accordance with the notice I gave a day or two ago, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unopposed bills reported by the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand the request.

Mr. MANDERSON. I inquire what has become of the motion of the Senator from New York to lay on the table the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire? Was there not a yea-and-nay vote ordered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not a sufficient number of Senators seconded the call, as the Chair stated at the time, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. The statement of the Chair was not heard. During this very hot weather it is very difficult to speak loud enough to be heard, and none of the Senators on this side of the Chamber understood the declaration of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated distinctly that not a sufficient number of Senators had seconded the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken over again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FAULKNER. What is the request?

Mr. CHANDLER. That the vote on the motion to lay my resolution on the table may be taken over again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator states that he did not hear the announcement made by the Chair.

Mr. WHITE. I suppose the Senator from New Hampshire has heard the announcement now made, and that meets his case. Therefore I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. That would meet my case if the Senator from California were the Presiding Officer of the Senate, but he does not happen to be in the chair.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be again taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I object, upon the ground that the Senate has entered upon another order of business. Consent was given to take up bills on the Calendar reported by the Committees on Pensions and Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to say for myself that when I made the request of the Chair to know what had become of the resolution, I was certainly under the impression that a yea-and-nay vote had been ordered, and I thought that prior to calling the roll some formal matter upon the President's desk was being disposed of. I certainly heard no motion put, and I did not hear the declaration of the Chair that not a sufficient number of Senators had seconded the call for the yeas and nays.

It is a very unsafe precedent for us to enter upon here, one that has never obtained heretofore, that when a vote has been put in this manner, there shall be no opportunity for Senators to vote who did not hear the question put.

Mr. WHITE. So far as I am concerned, if the Senator states he did not hear the question put, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. I did not. I supposed the yeas and nays were to be called. I was under that impression.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state——

Mr. MANDERSON. I am not blaming the Chair at all. I, perhaps, was not paying sufficient attention.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When some Senator upon the left of the Chair called for the yeas and nays the Chair submitted the question to the Senate distinctly, and not more than three or four Senators raised their hands. The Chair thereupon said that the demand for the yeas and nays was not seconded. That was the announcement of the Chair, and the Chair did not suppose there was any misapprehension about it.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw any objection I may have made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his objection. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRAY. What is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? I did not hear it.

Mr. MANDERSON. That the vote shall again be taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the vote be again taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] to lay on the table the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. McMILLAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. SQUIRE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair will state.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. DOLPH. I was out of the Chamber when the name of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] was called. I understand he announced his pair with me. As he is not now in the Chamber I shall not vote. If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. McLAURIN. I inquire whether the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

So the Senate refused to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5481) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7451) to authorize the entry of land for gravel pits and reservoir purposes and authorizing the grant of right of way for pipe purposes, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. McRAE, Mr. NEILL and Mr. LACEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 829) granting an honorable discharge to Cyrus Payne.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4606) to amend sections 5365 and 5366 of the Revised Statutes, and the bill (H. R. 7488) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant leases for sites on the Hot Springs Reservation, Arkansas, for cold-water reservoirs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1471) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of the American Transportation Company for dredging done at Fairport Harbor, in the State of Ohio; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to permit me to have some amendments acted upon which are necessary. On page 129, after line 10, I move to insert:

To pay to Bessie A. Stockbridge, widow of the Hon. Francis B. Stockbridge, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Michigan, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also offer another amendment to come in immediately after the amendment just agreed to. On page 129, after the amendment just adopted, I move to insert:

To pay to Florence S. Vance, widow of the Hon. Zebulon B. Vance, deceased, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer an amendment which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] says is necessary. He has reported it from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The SECRETARY. On page 127, at the end of line 23, insert:

For the execution of the obligations of the United States and the protection of the interests and property of the United States in the Samoan Islands, under any existing treaty with the Government of said islands and with the Governments of Germany and Great Britain, the sum of $6,000, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the President.

Mr. MORGAN. Perhaps I had better make some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will refrain from submitting any remarks, as it seems to be the desire to save time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on aggreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 44, after line 17, I move to insert:

To enable the committee on final report to arrange the reports of the various Departments and prepare a synopsis of the same, $3,500, or so much as may be necessary, to be expended in the discretion of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to withdraw the amendment which I offered yesterday. I move to amend the bill by inserting in line 13, page 74, after the words "United States" the word "twenty;" so that the clause will read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, $25,000.

I desire to say briefly that I have consulted with those in charge of this work, and have ascertained that a very satisfactory test as to the water supply of the United States for irrigation and other purposes can be made for the sum of $25,000. The work will be under the charge of the Geological Survey. I am assured that the money will be judiciously and properly expended, and I am led to believe that the amendment will not meet with any opposition on the part of the committee.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I am in accord with the amendment of my colleague for an increase of the appropriation, but I suggest to him and to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this will hardly reach the full extent of the demand. There are many sections of the country called semiarid where it is impossible to irrigate by the use of streams. There are parts of the State of Nebraska which could be placed under ditch, but the ditches could not be filled by the diversion of any of the water courses. The Department of Agriculture has made some exploration in the matter of artesian wells, and in the State of South Dakota several artesian wells were bored in localities designated by the experts as probably good ground for the purpose.

The most wonderful people in matters of irrigation are the people of the far East. In the old countries there are evidences of very wise irrigation. In China they have carried it to a very great extreme, and the Chinaman has brought into this country, with great profit, some of the irrigation ideas of his country. Very frequently where streams are not available, those people, by boring into the earth, obtain an undercurrent of water and bring it up by different processes, sometimes by hand and sometimes by the use of animals working pumps. It seems to me that we should include also, and I call my colleague's attention to it in the hope that he may adopt the idea in his amendment, some investigation of the matter of artesian wells. I should like to see the Government go to the extent of boring some experimental wells, but I do not ask for that. What I should like to see, however, is such a form of proposition as I will state; and I call the particular attention of the Senator from Missouri to the language. I do not think he will find it objectionable in any degree.

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, $25,000.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to say just a word?

Mr. MANDERSON. With very great pleasure.

Mr. KYLE. I will state that I this morning conferred with the experts, and they expect to include in their investigation the artesian-well supply. It might be well, however, to include those words in the amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it would be well to do so, because I doubt very much whether the language used, "for gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States," would include that investigation of underground currents which would prompt the boring by private parties of artesian wells in the semiarid sections.

Mr. KYLE. I think it would be well to insert those words.

Mr. MANDERSON. It seems to me there can be no possible objection to enlarging the amendment to that extent.

Mr. KYLE. We shall make no opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, after the words "United States," the words, "including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections." The amendment will then read:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, including the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells in arid and semiarid sections, $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the amendment of the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In consequence of the amendment just adopted the total, in line 16, must be changed from $414,100 to $434,100. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 45, after line 19, I move to insert:

For salaries of special agents, independent treasury, $2,500.

I ask that a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of to-day may be read in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to state that the examination and transfer of the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, Cal., expected to have been commenced in June, was delayed until after July 1, 1894, making it necessary to pay the expenses thereof, which are greater than for any other office, from appropriation for present fiscal year. The sum of $5,000 is included in the Book of Estimates, page 35, for salaries special agents independent treasury, 1895, but $3,000 only is appropriated in the legislative act, approved July 31, 1894, which is not sufficient to pay the expenses of the examinations to be made during this fiscal year owing to the several changes in the subtreasury offices. It is, therefore, necessary to provide for an additional sum of $2,500, and I suggest that the following item be included in the deficiency bill, viz: "Salaries special agents independent treasury, 1895, $2,500."

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to offer an amendment which has been approved by the Committee on Military Affairs. On page 107, after line 19, I move to insert:

For construction of quarters for governor of home, $2,000; for fire protection, including pumps, pipes, hydrants, and placing and locating same, $8,100.

I desire to state certain facts in connection with the amendment. At the Soldiers' Home in Santa Monica, Cal., to which the amendment has reference, there was a residence for the governor and his family constructed at the time when the main buildings were erected. Last February, or in the early part of March, that edifice was destroyed by fire. The treasurer has been acting as governor of the home until lately, but at a recent meeting of the Board of Managers a governor was selected. There is no place for him to reside within the grounds.

The Santa Monica Home, as the Senate will remember, is a new institution. The buildings, which are quite costly, are erected upon grounds donated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] and his coöwners in the ranch upon which the buildings are situated. The second portion of the amendment, proposing to appropriate $8,100, is offered because the Board of Managers have determined that in no other way can the buildings be protected from the danger of fire. Indeed, they prepared amendments and asked the presentation of the same, appropriating as much as fifty-odd thousand dollars for that purpose, but it is essential that the fire protection contemplated by the amendment shall be accorded if the property, estimated to be worth nearly a half million dollars, is to be protected.

For these reasons I submit that the amendment should be agreed to. I have no doubt that if I had been able to place the matter fully before the committee it would not have been necessary to have offered the suggestions which I have made. I have eliminated everything save those two items, which I know personally, from my knowledge of the locality, are essential.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 107, line 22, $17,100 having been added, the total should be changed so as to read "$208,225."

The SECRETARY. On page 107, line 22, strike out "$191,125" and insert "208,225."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 110, line 25, the total should be changed so that it will be "$2,315,973."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The change will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 129, after line 2, I move to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and the House borne on the annual and session rolls at the close of the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, including the Capitol police, for extra service during the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does that come from any committee? Has it been passed upon by a standing committee of the Senate?

Mr. CAMDEN. It comes from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with a favorable report.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no use to include the words "the same to be immediately available."

Mr. GORMAN. Let that clause be stricken out.

Mr. CAMDEN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified if there be no objection.

Mr. ROACH. I move to amend the proposed amendment by inserting, after the word "Congress," in line 4, "and those whose service terminated during such session."

Mr. CAMDEN. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia accepts the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the object of that amendment? I do not understand it.

Mr. CAMDEN. It is to include two or three who were dropped from the rolls during the session.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. I am opposed to the whole proposition, but I hope the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will not be agreed to. It is extending it beyond any precedent we have ever had.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from West Virginia to accept the amendment to his amendment.

Mr. CAMDEN. I will not accept it if there is objection. Being objected to, I will adhere to the amendment as I offered it, striking out the last clause, on the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia does not accept the amendment to the amendment, and the question is on agreeing to the same.

Mr. ROACH. I desire to say in reference to my amendment that I understand it simply includes three persons who will be shut out if it is not adopted.

Mr. GORMAN. Why?

Mr. ROACH. Because it proposes to include three persons not now in the service of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That would be establishing a precedent that whenever we undertook to make some compensation to those who had rendered nine, ten, or eleven months' service, those who had been discharged at the beginning of the session should fare the same way with them. The only ground on which a proposition such as the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia is based is continuous service and prolonged service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment reported by the present occupant of the chair [Mr. FRYE] from the Committee on Foreign Relations. On page 127, after line 17, I move to insert:

For the Bureau of American Republics: For preparing, printing, and circulating publications, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the letter of the Director of the Bureau to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of the conferees.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the same as the letter I have in my hand?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the same letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

BUREAU OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLICS,
No. 2 LAFAYETTE SQUARE,
Washington, July 26, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In the estimate made in my annual report last December it was stated that $25,000 would be required for the operations of the Bureau of the American Republics for the ensuing fiscal year. There was also reference to a desire to make the Bureau, so far as possible, self-supporting. This was supplemented by conversation with members of both Houses by a statement that I believe this could be accomplished within a short time if the appropriation is made. Perhaps in a degree misled by this statement, the appropriation asked for was cut down to $10,000. I desire the additional $16,000 added to the deficiency bill in order that the operations of the Bureau may be conducted on the lines laid out.

It will readily be perceived that while it might be possible to make the Bureau self-sustaining with the funds in hand for printing and circulating, though sale, documents already in a large degree prepared, this will be impossible under the rules governing a Government officer if we are obliged to restrict the operations of the Bureau because of a too limited appropriation. It will be readily understood that with a smaller sum the director would not be allowed to enter into contracts, or even to carry out those already made, as in good faith he would be forced to extend the expenditure of the appropriation over the whole fiscal year and to limit the operations of the Bureau to such an extent as to materially interfere with the chances of making it self-supporting. For these reasons I would ask that $16,000 be added in the deficiency bill to the appropriation for this Bureau, to be expended in printing and circulating its documents.

Yours very truly,

CLINTON FURBISH, Director.

Hon. F. M. COCKRELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. KYLE. At the end of line 2, page 58, I move to insert:

For the purchase, by the Joint Committee on the Library and with their approval, of Miss Eugenia Shankland's copy of Mr. R. Peale's original portrait of George Washington, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Librarian of Congress shall cause said copy to be placed in some suitable part of the new Library building.

Mr. President, I can see no objection to the amendment in the form in which I have now presented it to the Senate. I find in looking over the list that there have been a great number of paintings of this character purchased by order of the Senate and House of Representatives. It is the usual way of obtaining them. I do not wish to take time to read the list. I think that the sum that is asked for the picture is not exorbitant. It should be placed by the Librarian of Congress in the new Library building in some suitable place. Senators who have examined this picture have pronounced it almost perfect. It is the only copy that has been made of Peale's portrait of Washington, which was purchased by order of this body, I believe, in 1832. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer another amendment. On page 76, after line 14, I move to strike out "$23,500" and insert "$28,000, $8,000 of which shall be used for the law department."

This amendment proposes a slight increase in the amount of money allowed for the law department of Howard University. During two different Congresses we have had considerable discussion in the Committee on Education and Labor, to which these subjects have been referred; and I believe it is a matter of general regret on the part of the committee and of many other members of the Senate that the law department of this university has been so poorly taken care of.

During the past eight or ten years it has been the earnest desire of such Senators as the late Senator Edmunds, the late Senator Evarts of New York, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], now a member of this body, and a great many others that this appropriation should be increased from $3,500 to $8,000. I wish to refer to page 28 of the report of the Committee on Education and Labor; and I will state that this amendment is submitted upon the recommendation of the Committee on Education and Labor. The expenses for the law department during the year as a whole are $7,960. For three professors, at $1,680 each, $5,040. That sum is not exorbitant for this purpose. For two lecturers, at $880 each per annum, $1,760. For one secretary, $500; for one janitor, $300; for fuel, light, furniture, and stationery, $400; making a total of $7,960.

It has been the custom for three or four Congresses I know to allow $3,500 for the law department. It is not enough. The total granted to the whole institution—and it is all granted in a lump sum—is $23,500. Twenty thousand dollars of that sum has been consumed in the other departments of the institution. When there was to be any curtailment in the way of expenses or the cutting down of anyone's salary it has always been taken from the law department of the university. I submit that is not fair. We have the spectacle before us of the professors in this institution, men of ability, men of learning, occupying positions under the Government elsewhere in order to eke out their meager salary and get enough for their support.

I believe if we are going to take care of this institution we should take care of it in a proper manner. The other departments of Howard University are pretty well taken care of. The theological department receives quite an amount of its funds from the donations of charitably disposed people, but the law department is left to shift for itself. I think this additional appropriation is nothing more than fair and right, because this institution receives students from about fifteen Southern States and a number of Northern States in addition to the number of students received from the District of Columbia. It is a national institution in a certain sense, as well as a District institution. It is also a fact that colored students are not admitted to the law schools of the District of Columbia and the surrounding States.

There is in this report an interesting correspondence between a professor in a law school here and another gentleman, relative to this point, as to whether colored students are admitted to the law schools of the District of Columbia, and the substance of it all is that they are not admitted. The only place where we can take care of those students is in the Howard University law school. I think there should be an ample allowance made for this institution. As anybody knows, $7,960 is a very meager allowance indeed. I hope there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the amendment been acted upon by any committee?

Mr. KYLE. I will state that it was the unanimous report of the Committee on Education and Labor, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The clause to which the Senator refers in the bill appropriates $23,500. Howard University had an appropriation for the same purpose in 1887 of $18,500; in 1888, $18,500; in 1889, $18,500; in 1890, $18,500; in 1891, $20,300; in 1892, $24,300; in 1893, $23,500; in 1894, $23,500. That is all that was estimated.

The committee has already made an addition here of $1,000 for books for the library of the law department, which we thought at the beginning was a very liberal allowance. I protest against the proposed increase of this appropriation. We have no evidence before us from the proper department in regard to it. We have the estimate, which is $23,500. I had hoped that the friends would be satisfied with the $1,000 that we have given for law books to be furnished.

I have some doubt as to whether the amendment is in order; but having been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, I suppose probably it may be in order. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. KYLE. We are very thankful indeed for the $1,000 given to the law library. Heretofore the institution has had no library whatever. The students have had to depend upon the Supreme Court library here, getting in around the tables, and they have been very frequently deprived of the use of the library because the room was occupied by other people. We all know that it is the appropriate thing for the students to have their own library in their own building; but the $1,000 for that purpose does not go to taking care of the professors, the teachers, the secretary, the janitor, and pay the expenses of fuel, lights, etc. Heretofore during all these years but $3,500 has been given for running the law department of the university. Twenty thousand dollars of the appropriation has been regularly consumed by the other departments of Howard university.

Mr. COCKRELL. The managers of the institution can distribute the appropriation just as they please.

Mr. KYLE. That has been the regular way of dividing the expenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. The managers of the university are responsible for it.

Mr. KYLE. They have always used the law department as a butt, so to speak. If any cutting was to be done it was done on the law department.

Mr. COCKRELL. The matter ought to be investigated if there has been any waste of money there.

Mr. KYLE. The law department has been cut down because they say there is not enough money to run the other departments of the university.

Mr. BERRY. I wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota how it comes that the Government furnishes this institution with money? Is there any other college in the United States to which money is appropriated by the Government? Is there any reason why a college should be established here and supported out of the general fund that does not apply to the various other colleges? Why does it not come out of the District fund, and why is it not provided for in the District appropriation bill rather than in the sundry civil appropriation bill? I should like to have some information about what kind of a claim these people have to come to the Government and say that it shall run the college for the benefit of the professors or anybody else.

Mr. KYLE. Howard University was chartered in 1867 by act of Congress, and since that time it has been the custom of Congress to make appropriations for the University.

Mr. BERRY. There are a number of other institutions here, the Catholic University, and divers institutions of a public character. All District institutions which receive Government aid are appropriated for in the District appropriation bill, one-half of the money coming from the funds of the District. This seems to be a mere gratuity given by Congress, and yet the Senator from South Dakota is complaining because we have not given more. As far as I am concerned I do not see by what authority we give a dollar for the support of this institution.

Mr. KYLE. The students there from the Senator's own State receive the benefit of this appropriation.

Mr. BERRY. But that is not the question. I do not know by what authority the Government establishes an institution of that character and appropriates money for it.

Mr. KYLE. It has been the custom since 1867 for the Government to take care of this institution. It grew out of the establishment of the Freedman's Bureau.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to say simply a few words upon the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota. I am satisfied from what the Senator from South Dakota says that the amendment ought to prevail, not perhaps because there is any particular legal obligation on the part of the Government to appropriate money for the support of Howard University, but the university was the outgrowth of the war, so to speak, the liberation of those people from bondage, and the Government at the time felt under at least a moral obligation to furnish them the means of education. I think that Congress can properly look upon those people who have so recently come out of bondage and slavery as wards of the nation to a very great extent; and if they are deprived of educational privileges in the other institutions of the District, or in those adjacent to the city of Washington, I see no reason why Congress should not make a reasonable appropriation to enable them to educate their people in medicine, law, theology, and every department that is essential to well-educated citizens.

Mr. President, I have some sympathy with this class of our people, knowing as we all do their history in this country, knowing that they have been recipients of cuffs and kicks, and that they have never been given a free and full opportunity to educate themselves and to occupy responsible stations in life. I feel that a great Government like this, with almost exhaustless resources, can not afford to deal smally with this class of our people, and that a sound public policy and a due regard for the safety and elevation of our nation require that we shall use some of our money in properly educating them, so that they can become useful citizens of the Republic.

It goes without saying that an appropriation of $3,500 for the purpose of paying salaries to professors and conducting the expenses of the law department of the university is entirely inadequate. It strikes me that the sum of $8,000 is inadequate. If there is any attempt on the part of the Government to sustain a law department in the university, a sufficient amount of money ought to be appropriated and promptly paid to furnish them an ample library for elementary education and to furnish them all the instructors and educators essential to make that feature of the university successful.

I can not help but be impressed with the thought that we are under a moral if not a legal obligation to this class of our citizens to furnish them every possible opportunity to become useful men and women in our country, and the mere pittance of a few thousand dollars asked by the Senator from South Dakota ought not to be rejected by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. KYLE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment moved by the honorable Senator from South Dakota will receive the attention of Senators on both sides of the Chamber. If Senators will examine the question I feel quite sure that it will have the hearty support of the Senate.

This law school is the only institution until you get far to the North where colored youth can be educated as lawyers. The colored people are a people of 8,000,000 in this country. Of course many of their educated youth will seek the legal profession. They are a nation of themselves. In accordance with the usages to which both races have consented (I will not now discuss the question whether they are wise or unwise), the education of the two races in institutions of this class is separate. It is very important indeed that instruction in the institutions and laws of the nation and of the several States shall be given to those young men by suitable and able teachers before they begin life.

This law school has an equipment of such teachers, and it has been able to command the assistance of eminent instructors who are not members of its own faculty. One of the most eminent law professors of Harvard gave gratuitously an admirable course of lectures there last winter. But the school is almost wholly without endowment. There are seventy or eighty pupils there—a larger number than there were at the Harvard law school in my time. They have no library to speak of; they have no apparatus to speak of. Those young men depend on the appropriation made by Congress for the scanty and meager salary of the instructors.

If we give a sum in gross to Howard University, the authorities of that university, although they are wise, devoted, and in every way excellent men, will apply the amount given to maintaining the existing force in the university; they will not branch out in new expenditures for the law school. There are other universities in the South; there is Lincoln University in Pennsylvania, and I believe there are some others in the North, intended for the colored people; but this is, I think, the only law school which they have in the country. This little sum of $8,000 would do more good, in my opinion, in the way of educating that people than almost ten times that amount expended in any other way.

I hope that my just and wise friend at the head of the Committee on Appropriations and all the members of that committee will be willing to make this little allowance. I think it would tend to stimulate private contributions very considerably. A former member of this body, our friend Mr. Evarts, whom we all so highly esteem, gave to that institution a hall, I believe, for its lectures and to contain its library. At any rate he made a very large part of the contribution which was raised to construct what is known as Evarts Hall. It is a modest building on Fifth street, which Senators pass in the street cars on their way to the Capitol. I mention this fact to show the very deep sense of that accomplished gentleman of the need of this provision. I hope that no question will be made about the appropriation of this very slight amount in addition to the sum fixed in the bill.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I may as well state at this point that I am not sure about the policy of the United States Government in engaging to furnish special education to any class of our citizens, but I am quite sure that where the Government undertakes to perform a duty of that kind it ought to be done with such a degree of wise liberality as will produce the best results. I take it upon myself to say that without the assistance proposed by this amendment that institution in this particular department will halt, hesitate, and be substantially inefficient. The money is necessary to the efficiency of the institution, and I should regret very much that from any consideration of mere economy Congress should fail to do that which the actual state of affairs demands should be done.

I should not favor any mere spontaneous suggestion coming from any member of this body of an appropriation for this purpose. As I understand, this subject has been considered by the proper committee; the committee has taken into consideration all the circumstances and the necessities of this institution; and it may be accepted by the Senate as the matured conclusion of one of the committees of this body that the thing proposed to be done ought to be done. It is not a mere result of sentiment. It is the deliberate conclusion of the proper committee. I believe if the United States assumes, as it has assumed, the patronage of this institution, that which the committee suggests would be the proper thing to do, and it ought to be satisfactory to the members of the Senate. We ought to do that which the committee has, after consideration, determined ought to be done.

Believing as I do, however, that every effort of the Government in the direction of the diffusion of either special or general knowledge promotes the welfare of mankind, and believing that in this District over which Congress has complete jurisdiction, the Government ought to demonstrate the effective usefulness of all the institutions of learning which it proposes to patronize, therefore I think this sum of money is needed, it is required, and, if it is not appropriated, the Government will be placed in the condition of a reluctant, grudging assistant to an institution, without having acted with that degree of judicious liberality which always produces the very best results.

Mr. KYLE. Just a word more, Mr. President. I wish to say that the only difference between the two parties upon this question is as to the appropriation of $4,500. They now have about $3,500, and we wish to give them $8,000; in other words, if we are going to assume the duty of caring for this institution, I believe we ought to do it in a proper way, and do it in a way that is becoming the statesmanship of this body.

To begin with, I do not believe this is the way to support this institution; but we have been doing it in this way for a long number of years. From the report I read these words:

> Howard University, with the exception of its theological department, has been and still is regarded as the charge of Congress at the seat of government, to which it must look for resources to carry forward its work, designed only to promote the public good and the national welfare.
>
> Accordingly, after the Freedmen's Bureau expired by limitation and the university lost the help derived from its situation in the buildings of the institution, the resources of the university became so reduced and so precarious as to seriously cripple and retard its work.
> Congress then came forward and made such provision for the normal, preparatory, collegiate, and industrial departments as enabled these to continue the important, useful, and rapidly growing work appropriate to each of them; but there is a disposition on the part of Congress each year to reduce this allowance, thus making it necessary to curtail the work each year by reducing both the number and compensation of the professors, so that, if the professors were not consecrated to the work, men of first-rate abilities could not be kept by the university.

Then, the report goes on to state that the theological department of the university has been cared for by private beneficence, and that the medical department has derived some advantages of a very helpful nature from the facilities afforded by the Freedmen's Hospital, which is located upon the property of the university.

In the year 1870 there was in the United States Treasury as bounty due 30,000 colored soldiers, $1,256,991.25. Some of that has since been appropriated, and I believe there is a bill now pending before the other House of Congress to appropriate two hundred or three hundred thousand dollars more for charitable institutions. There is now, I believe, remaining in the Treasury to the credit of these colored people in the neighborhood of six or seven hundred thousand dollars.

The proper thing for Congress to do about the Howard University is to take this money belonging to those colored people out of the Treasury of the United States and endow this institution in a liberal way in all its departments and cease henceforth to grant them any gratuity whatever. That is the way it should be done; but this year it can not be done. We have assumed the control, we have taken the guardianship, and given funds to this institution. Let us, therefore, do it in a liberal way, and not put the professors in the institution upon beggarly salaries for their subsistence.

Mr. CHANDLER. I trust that the call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment may be withdrawn, and that the amendment may be unanimously agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the call for the yeas and nays be withdrawn, and let another viva voce vote be taken.

Mr. KYLE. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, and I ask that we may have another viva voce vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the vote is taken, with the permission of the Chair I wish to submit a suggestion.

The late Mr. Justice Miller in a very eloquent address emphasized the disposition of the American people to be governed by law. Of all the peoples of the earth, he said, the American people are more disposed to be governed by law than those of any other nation. Here are 8,000,000 colored citizens, and I say to the Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that we can not spend too much money in educating the young men of that race and the young women of that race. They are here; they are increasing in number; they are not going to be deported to any other country; and the one thing they need is education.

Therefore, I want to thank the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, for the investigation the committee have made into this subject; and I also want to thank the Senator for reporting this amendment. I also wish to thank the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] for the words he has spoken in behalf of the amendment.

I am glad that those two Senators have undertaken to champion this small increase of the appropriation so that Howard University may have a department of law. And I turn from the junior Senator from Illinois to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask him whether he is as willing as is his colleague that this little sum of money shall be granted by the American Congress for the purpose of educating in the principles of constitutional and municipal law the colored young men of the Afro-American race in this country?

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from New Hampshire has called upon me to answer whether I am in favor of the proposed amendment. I will say that I usually stay with the committee of which I am a member in what we determine when in session in that committee, but I wish to say further, in all frankness, that I have had more than ordinary interest in Howard University ever since I have been a member of the Senate. My attention has been called to it from year to year by persons of color who are seeking an education in the institution, and who are poor and unable to attend the schools unless they can at the same time obtain employment in the service of the Government. If I have been active in any one direction in trying to find places for persons who come here for the purpose of getting employment, it has been for those persons of color who come from my own State and from other States seeking an opportunity to get some position where they may earn something and at the same time secure an education.

I have had a little more than ordinary interest in this institution in another way. I had the honor only two years ago of being invited by a class of its graduates to address them on their commencement day, and never in my life have I felt more interested in a class of young men who were starting out in the world to make their living, and to make their way through it, than I did upon the occasion when I talked to the young men connected with that university.

Therefore I venture, believing that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not regard me as going outside of the line of propriety in doing so, to say that I hope the amendment offered to the bill, increasing the amount of this appropriation, will be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

For payment of assessments made by the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, for the improvement of the public streets around and adjoining the block in said city owned by the United States, upon which Government building is situated, $1,219.23.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, in the city of Portland the public streets are improved by the adjacent lot-owners. The law requires every lot-owner to improve the street adjacent to his property, and provides a method of assessing the cost against the property. The city of Portland has improved some of the streets passing by the public buildings, and improved them under the method provided in the charter of the city for the improvement of the streets. All the property-owners have paid the warrants issued against their property for such improvements, but of course there can be no legal proceedings against the property of the United States, and the warrants due to the contractors for the property belonging to the Government on which the city buildings stand are unpaid.

I understand there has been some question as to whether Congress should pay such assessments. I am entirely familiar with the requirement in all cases of public buildings that the State shall cede jurisdiction to the General Government over the site for a public building of the United States, which will exempt such property from taxation, but this is not in the strict sense of the word "taxation;" it is more in the nature of an improvement of the property or approaches to the property.

I know that shortly after I came here, eight or nine or ten years ago, there was a similar case where other streets had been improved adjacent to such property, and I offered an amendment similar to this one, which the Committee on Appropriations kindly put on the bill, and the United States paid for the street assessment. I am told by the chairman of the committee that a different rule has been adopted; but how general it is, or how long it has prevailed, or whether there are exceptions to it, I do not know; and I offer the amendment (thinking it is a just amendment, and that the appropriation should be made to pay the assessment) for the purpose of drawing out the chairman of the committee and getting an accurate statement, which shall go into the RECORD, as to the present attitude of Congress upon this subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, what the Senator from Oregon says in regard to an appropriation such as he now proposes having once been made is true. Probably ten or twelve years ago on one appropriation bill provision was made for paying for a part of the street pavement around two or three public buildings assessed in the way of which the Senator speaks. One of them was in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, around the large custom-house there. Provision was made for such pavements on one side of it.

Mr. DOLPH. This appropriation is for one side only.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand. Those amendments were put on in the Senate and the House agreed to them. At the next session we put on the other part of the streets around the public building at St. Louis and a number of others. The House of Representatives refused to accede to the amendments, and the Senate had to recede. At the next session of Congress, probably, those amendments were put on again. Then it was that their insertion was positively refused. Since that time there has been no amendment of that kind put on any appropriation bill in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, and it has been adopted as a rule that appropriations will not be made for the paving of the streets around a public building. We pay for the sidewalks, which the Government puts down and keeps in repair, but not for the paving of the streets.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. It would be useless to have it agreed to, as the House would not sanction it, the rule to which I refer having been adopted and acquiesced in so long.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Does the Senator know of any good reason for the rule? I confess I see no good reason for it, and I am surprised at what the Senator has stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are different points of view from which this subject may be considered. The erection of a public building, costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, in any neighborhood is undoubtedly an enormous enhancement of the value of the property fronting on it, and that would be a sufficient answer, I think.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I do not think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLPH. I will state in regard to the amendment which has just been acted upon, that I had a talk with the chairman of the committee in relation to it, and while, of course, I believe it is a just and proper amendment, if that rule has been adopted and acquiesced in for years, I could hardly hope for the adoption of the amendment. My object was to have put in the RECORD the objections to it and the reasons why the amendment is not adopted.

I now offer an amendment for the appropriation of a very small amount for a very important object. A bill on the same subject has already been recommended by the Committee on Commerce and has passed the Senate, providing for a fog signal at Cape Arago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

For the erection of a first-class fog signal at or near Cape Arago light station, $5,000.

Mr. DOLPH. I send to the desk a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, September 8, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee of September 5, 1893, inclosing Senate bill No. 757, appropriating $5,000 for the erection of a first-class fog signal at or near Cape Arago (Oregon) light station.

This bill with your letter was referred to the Light-House Board, which returned them with the statement that commerce and navigation would be greatly benefited by the establishment of this fog signal, and that it can be done for the amount named in the bill.

Recommendation is therefore made that the bill be passed.

A copy of this Senate bill, 757, is inclosed.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES S. HAMLIN,
Acting Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. This amendment is not estimated for by the Department.

Mr. DOLPH. It is recommended.

Mr. COCKRELL. A bill was recommended to be passed by Congress, which is independent legislation. The amendment is not appropriate on this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. It was recommended by the Committee on Commerce, and it is in order, if that is what the Senator means.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the Committee on Commerce reported this proposition as an amendment, or simply reported in favor of the passage of a bill to the same effect?

Mr. DOLPH. The committee has reported this as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. We thought we were very liberal in allowing for these matters. This was not one of the things that was estimated for. I suppose there are twenty or thirty other places where, if the Committee on Commerce was to send to the Light-House Board or to the Secretary of the Treasury a bill proposing to establish a light or a fog signal, the Light-House Board would recommend it and the Secretary of the Treasury would approve it. We must make some discrimination; we must select the most important points, because all can not be provided for at once.

This proposed appropriation was not recommended in the regular estimates; but when a bill was introduced and sent to the Department, the Department did not oppose it, but simply recommended it, as any other bill would have been recommended.

Mr. DOLPH. This place is very important. I see there are a number of Senate amendments providing for lights and fog signals in this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations examined the question very carefully and we gave just as liberally as we thought we could give to those that were the most urgently recommended by the Light-House Board. Some of these were recommended as indispensable, and others were recommended as important, but not indispensable.

I have no doubt, the Senator having called attention to this matter, and it having been considered, that probably at the coming session this will be classed, after the others have been provided for, as one among those which are indispensable, the Department having to select four or five or six; but I do not think the amendment ought to be inserted in this bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 56, it is proposed to insert:

For purchase of a site, erection of buildings, pier, disinfecting apparatus, launch, and small boats for a quarantine hospital at or near the mouth of the Columbia River, and maintenance of same for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, $40,000.

Mr. DOLPH. This is no local matter, and no proposition for a local appropriation or a local improvement. I offer this amendment in the interest of the seventy million people of the United States; I offer it for the purpose of providing protection for the people of Astoria, of Portland, and of all the cities upon the Columbia River; for the protection of all the people of Oregon; for the protection of the Pacific coast; and, as I say, for the protection of the seventy million people of the United States, or, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] suggests, the sixty-five million people. Sixty-five million is enough to serve my present purpose.

My attention being called to this matter, I offered the resolution in the Senate calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to report as to the urgency of the establishment of a quarantine hospital at or near the mouth of the Columbia River, and inquiring whether any Congressional action is necessary concerning the same. I desire to state that there is not on the Columbia River even a marine hospital. At Portland contracts are made with private hospitals for the care of sick sailors. At Astoria it is the same. These hospitals are located right in the midst of the most populous portions of those cities. There is not only no marine hospital, no Government hospital on the Columbia River, although there is at almost every other point in the United States, and at far less important points than that, but there is no contagious diseases hospital, the nearest one being at Port Townsend, 275 miles distant.

The Secretary of the Treasury referred the resolution to which I have called attention to the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, and he reported to the Secretary of the Treasury as follows:

It is believed that a proper quarantine establishment is a necessity at the mouth of the Columbia, and the inclosed report of Dr. Stoner shows a large and increasing number of arrivals of vessels from foreign ports. A station in this locality is necessary not only for the port of Astoria, but for the city of Portland and other towns on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, and would answer for all ports on the Pacific coast of Oregon and part of Washington.

I believe the "urgency" is sufficiently indicated by the above-mentioned facts; but the existence of the plague in virulent form in China warrants a degree of apprehension, and is an additional reason for making provision as soon as possible.

Pending the selection of a site, it is believed that an old naval vessel may be turned over to the Treasury Department by the Navy Department for temporary use.

He considered the urgency so great as to recommend that—

The necessary equipment of a quarantine establishment consists of a pier, with warehouse, steam disinfecting chamber, sulphur fumigating furnace, tanks for holding disinfecting solutions, apparatus for discharge of ballast, small hospital, officers and men's quarters, boathouse, and boarding vessel.

The Secretary of the Treasury says in reference to this letter—and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee, who did not evidently in his haste in examining the papers last evening, get the real point to what the Secretary says:

From the papers inclosed it will be observed that while a careful inspection is maintained at the port of Astoria, there is no provision there for the removal of the sick from an infected vessel, nor for the vessel's disinfection. An infected vessel, under the circumstances, would necessarily be sent to the national quarantine station near Port Townsend, some 275 miles distant.

Necessitating a trip again out of the mouth of the Columbia River and over the bar 200 miles up to the Straits of Juan de Fuca, and 75 miles up the Straits of Juan de Fuca to Port Townsend.

If, in view of the increasing commerce of the port of Astoria, as well as its present commercial importance and the great distance from the nearest disinfection station, it is deemed necessary to establish this station, a Congressional appropriation, not to exceed $40,000, should be made for the purchase of site, erection of buildings, pier, disinfecting apparatus, launch and small boats, and maintenance for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

I read from Dr. Stoner's report, showing the number of arrivals and the character of them:

The number of vessels arriving at this port during the preceding calendar year, by months, was as follows: January, 63; February, 39; March, 49; April, 42; May, 48; June, 43; July, 41; August, 37; September, 55; October, 39; November, 63; December, 35.

Now, I read the part of the report which the very able, painstaking, and industrious chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—and I take this occasion to say that the country and the Senate are under lasting obligations for the vigilance and industry of the Senator from Missouri—saw in hastily examining this paper last evening. It is paragraph 14:

As an inspection station, the quarantine facilities are sufficient to care for the shipping, with perhaps one exception, viz, a single boatman with a small boat is an insufficient service for boarding purposes at this station. The waters are often so turbulent that it is impossible to reach vessels in this way, and the necessity for a steam launch is very plain to anyone having knowledge of the facts.

I admit that the arrangement of the State inspection system is all that is needed; but when you have inspected a vessel and found a case of the Chinese plague there or find one-half of the crew down with some contagious disease, what are you going to do with the seamen or passengers and the vessel? It is not the inspection I am talking about. I speak of the facilities for taking care of the patients and fumigating the vessel. What does Dr. Stoner say in regard to that?

No facilities for disinfection, etc.

In his last report to his excellency the governor of Oregon the State health officer stated the "necessity for the establishment of a quarantine station, with the proper buildings and modern appliances, for the treatment of vessels, and to be located at or near Smiths Point."

It should be lower down than that. It should not be so near the city of Astoria.

He further stated that "another serious defect in the State law is the fact that no penalty is attached to it, and that any master might disobey the orders of the health officer, and thus introduce diseases into the State without being subject to any penalty whatever."

I admit that the urgency of the matter largely arises from the existence of the Chinese plague in Hongkong and other ports from which vessels sail directly to the Columbia River. The Government should possess not only a marine hospital on the Columbia River, at Portland or Astoria, or at both places, but there should be a contagious disease hospital, there should be a quarantine station, there should be some place to which a person coming in on a ship infected with a contagious disease might be taken and a wharf to which the vessel might be taken and disinfected. There is nothing of the sort there. If such a vessel comes to the mouth of the Columbia River the only thing to do is to send her 275 miles north into Puget Sound.

I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate in discussing this proposition. As I said, it is not made solely in the interest of the people of Oregon. It is not made solely for the protection of the people of Astoria and Portland and other cities on the Columbia River and Puget Sound. It is made for the purpose of protecting the health and the lives of 65,000,000 people. I hold in my hand a recent newspaper article referring to this plague. It brings the history of the disease down to 1845, showing the ravages and the prevalence of the plague. It is not a long article, and I ask that it may appear in the RECORD. I do not care to stop to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The article will be printed, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

THE BLACK DEATH—AUTHENTIC AND INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE PLAGUE—IT IS NOW DEVASTATING SOUTHERN CHINA—UNDISPUTED FACTS THAT ALMOST STAGGER HUMAN CREDULITY—IT IS PERIODIC AND PREVAILED BEFORE THE CHRISTIAN ERA.

The plague that is now ravaging China is the veritable "black death" that appeared in Asia in 1345—the most appalling, distressing scourge the world has ever known—spreading over Egypt, Syria, Greece, Turkey, and the whole of Europe. Twenty-five millions of people perished on the European continent, and thirty-six millions perished in Asia. It is recorded that half the human race perished by it in the eight years that it prevailed.

In the year of Rome 388 commenced a most desolating plague of three years' duration. This was in a time of profound peace, says the historian. It seemed to be the destiny of Rome never to be exempt from fear and dangers, for when war and sedition ceased pestilence arose.

In this horrible plague, Livy tells us, perished the great Camillus, and asserts that 10,000 citizens died in a day. On this occasion recourse was had to the ceremony of the Lectisterium. This ceremony consisted in placing the statutes of Apollo, Latona, Diana, Hercules, Mercury, and Neptune on three beds, and serving them with magnificent repasts for eight days, and a nail was driven in the wall of Jupiter's Temple. This was done under the law.

The time of year when the law required that this ceremony should be performed, the ides of September, indicates the period when the pestilence began in Rome, just the time when the malarial districts of this country, in hot, dry seasons, begin to develop their evil results. The historians of that time attributed this great outburst of disease, as they did all other plagues, to earthquakes and eruptions of volcanoes, the appearance of a comet, or planetary disturbance. In reality it was occasioned by the malaria that arose from the Pontine marshes by which Rome was surrounded. Blue pills and quinine would have proved more beneficial in this case than the Lectisterium.

A terrible malady, attacking men and cattle, manifested itself in the year of Rome 576, of which Livy says: "The pestilence which had affected cattle only in previous years now turned to a disease of man. Those who were seized with it never survived beyond the seventh day; those who did survive were for a long time affected with quartan ague. The disease made its most fatal ravages among the slaves, whose dead bodies lay unburied along the highways, as it was impossible to bury the bodies of free citizens; their corpses lay unburied, untouched by dogs or vultures, and wasted away by corruption. Carnivorous animals would not touch the bodies of the dead."

Historians relate that an appalling pestilence in the year of Rome 628 arose in Africa from dead locusts. These animals were brought toward Numidia and Utica by a strong east wind in such multitudes that they devoured every green thing, not sparing even the bark of trees. They were driven by the south wind into the Mediterranean, and being washed on shore in the hot season, they putrefied and caused a most deadly plague. It is recorded that 800,000 persons perished in Numidia alone, 200,000 on the coast of Carthage and Utica, and 50,000 of the Roman troops.

A. D. 66, in the reign of Nero, occurred a horrible pestilence. Tacitus, in speaking of it, says: "In that year occurred a most violent tempest in Campania, which destroyed villages, forests, and grain; also occurred a destructive earthquake. The ravages of this plague swept 300,000 of the population of the city of Rome, which at that time contained not to exceed 1,000,000 inhabitants. Houses were filled with the dead and the streets with funerals. Slaves, plebeians, all classes, were suddenly taken off, amid the lamentations of their wives and children, who, while they assisted sick or mourned over the dead, were seized with the disease, and, perishing, were burnt on the same funeral pile."

A. D. 167 appeared in Rome a general fatal pestilence, which originated in Asia a few years before and was brought to Rome by a soldier. A. Marcelinus relates that "this horrid pestilence originated from the foul air of a small box which a soldier had opened in search of plunder after the taking of Selencia. From this little box was generated a universal pestilence, which spread from Persia to Gaul, and from thence over the whole earth. Famine followed, and myriads of caterpillars and other pestiferous insects overran the earth devouring all vegetation." The pestilence referred to no doubt, was the cholera.

Various historians tell us that in the year 1345 a destructive pestilence appeared in Asia. Says Villaui, it was the most appalling, distressing scourge the world had ever known. It spread over Egypt, Syria, Greece, Turkey, and the whole of Europe, where it continued its ravages for five years. The disease baffled all medical skill. It was called the "black death." Among the symptoms were a black tongue, a raging fever, vomiting or spitting of blood. It destroyed life in half the time the bilious plague did. It is recorded that half the human family perished in about eight years; in many cities nine died out of ten, and some places were entirely depopulated. In London 50,000 dead bodies were buried in one graveyard; in Norwich died about the same number; in Venice died 100,000; in Lubec, 90,000; in Florence, 90,000; in the East perished 20,000,000 in one year. In Spain the disease raged three years and carried off two-thirds of the people.

About the year 1500, in England, appeared a new pestilence called the sweating plague. The mortality from it was appalling. Sir Thomas More, in a letter to Erasmus, declares this disease more dangerous than a battle. In London it carried off upwards of 30,000 of the population. Says Maitland's History of London: "It is a current opinion that the disease was imported into Europe by the first adventurers to America with Columbus."

Mr. DOLPH. I have now discharged my duty. If the appropriation is not made, if some provision is not made for quarantining a vessel which may arrive at the mouth of the Columbia River upon which there is a case of the plague coming from Chinese ports, I have discharged my duty. I submitted a resolution in the Senate calling for information, and I have the information with the recommendation of the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service and the Secretary of the Treasury for the appropriation. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will at least consent that the amendment may go into the bill, and give it further consideration in conference.

If the amendment is not adopted and this provision is not made, as I say, I have done my duty, and I let the committee take their share of the responsibility. I believe, as I have now stated the matter, that the Senator from Missouri will thank me for calling attention to the proposition as fully as I have and that he will take it under further advisement.

Mr. COCKRELL. The laws of Oregon in regard to quarantine seem to be very efficient, and there is a very efficient officer there. So far as the inspection, etc., is concerned, I have no doubt that it is very efficiently and acceptably done.

The State, as it pays the expense of this inspection, etc., can very readily provide some place for and manner of disinfection. The United States has not yet assumed entire jurisdiction of the inspection and disinfection of contagious diseases in every part of the country. We have in the pending bill a provision to the effect that—

The President of the United States is hereby authorized in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, or smallpox, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1893, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same; and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force.

That covers about $600,000 which could be utilized.

Mr. DOLPH. Oh, no. The provision specifies cholera, yellow fever, and smallpox. It would not at all cover the disease of which we are apprehensive. It does not cover the Chinese plague. I do not think a dollar of the appropriation made has been expended on the Pacific coast. There has not been a dollar expended in Oregon, on the Columbia River. There has never been a marine hospital there. The Government makes a contract with private hospitals right in the midst of the city of Portland and right in the center of Astoria to take care of sailors who come in there suffering from disease. The Government never has expended a dollar there, and there would not be a dollar expended now.

Considering the fact that 100,000 people have died in a short period of time in Shanghai, from which port vessels came to the Columbia River, I believe that it is our duty to make this provision. If that is too much, give something for a temporary provision, so that in case a vessel comes in there infected with disease it may be properly taken care of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to include in the provision the disease of which the Senator from Oregon speaks.

Mr. DOLPH. It is the Chinese plague or black death.

Mr. COCKRELL. That disease ought to be included if there is any danger of its infesting the Senator's coast through the medium of vessels plying between the coast and Chinese ports. That disease ought to be inserted in this provision anyway, independent of the other matter.

Mr. DOLPH. That ought to be done. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that the President might have the money to expend, but how will it help us when a vessel comes in there with half her crew down and some contagious disease on board. You can not erect a hospital in a few days. It can not be improvised. You have to build one. There have to be appliances for disinfecting a vessel and facilities for taking care of the patients. I do not think that I am asking this provision in the interest of Oregon. I do not care a bagatelle for the money. I am asking it in the interest and for the preservation of the health and lives of the people of the United States. I think the Senator from Missouri had better let the amendment go in anyway and consider the matter further in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from Oregon will give me the proper name of the disease to which he has referred I will move to insert it in the provision on page 53. It ought to go in the clause anyway.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. The Chinese plague.

Mr. DOLPH. It is called the Chinese plague.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 56, line 9, I move to strike out the word "or," and after the word "smallpox" to insert "or Chinese plague."

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from North Dakota tells me it is called the black death.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to insert the words "or Chinese plague or black death."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, line 9, before the word "smallpox," strike out "or," and after the word "smallpox" insert "or Chinese plague or black death;" so as to read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, or Chinese plague or black death, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 3, 1893, etc.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri to insert the words "and other contagious diseases." There are many diseases which are equally as contagious as yellow fever or smallpox. Vessels are frequently placed in quarantine to guard against the infection of those diseases. Therefore I think the provision should be comprehensive in its terms and should embrace other contagious diseases.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not extend it to measles, whooping cough, mumps, and all such diseases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I offer an amendment to come in after line 20, on page 126.

The SECRETARY. After line 20, on page 126, insert:

For assistant or deputy clerk of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, not exceeding $2,000, in the discretion of the court. For necessary expenditures in the conduct of the office of the clerk of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $500; and the clause in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," making an appropriation of $2,000 for clerical assistance and necessary expenditures in the conduct of such clerk's office, be and the same is hereby repealed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state in a word the reason for the amendment. In the act creating the court of appeals for the District of Columbia it was provided that there should be a clerk, whose salary should be $3,000. There was no provision for a deputy clerk. It was provided, however, that there should be an allowance to the clerk of $2,000 for clerical and extraordinary services in the office. When the legislative appropriation bill of the present session was passed appropriations were made on page 124 of that bill in accordance with the then existing law. Since then a provision has been inserted in House bill 5860, that has been signed by the President, and has become a law, which changes the law in reference to the office of the clerk of the court of appeals.

It permits the clerk to stand as heretofore at a salary of $3,000, but it provides for a deputy or assistant clerk at $2,000, and then makes an allowance of $500 for extraordinary services. The purpose of my amendment is to correct the appropriation so as to meet the law as it stands to-day. That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I have one other little amendment which I desire to offer, to be inserted after line 5, on page 11.

The SECRETARY. Insert after line 5, on page 11:

That $15,500 of the remaining balance of the sum appropriated by the act approved March 3, 1891, for the establishment of a light and fog signal at the mouth of the Coquille River, Oregon, to be used in the erection of light-keeper's dwellings and a fog signal at the Cape Arago light station.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. I will state to the chairman of the committee that the amendment simply transfers a balance of $15,500, appropriated by the act of March 3, 1891, for the establishment of a lighthouse at the mouth of the Coquille River, Oregon, so that it can be utilized in erecting lightkeeper's dwellings and fog signal at Cape Arago. I hold in my hand a bill for that purpose which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. At the present session?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. At the present session.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it estimated for by the Department?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. No.

Mr. DOLPH. It is not an additional appropriation at all?

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is not an additional appropriation. It is simply a transfer of the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN. In line 13, on page 60 of the bill, I move to strike out the word "sixty" and insert the words "one hundred and twenty;" so that it will read "$120,000."

This part of the bill has to do with caring for the timber of the country. The bill provides an appropriation—

To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands.

It then provides:

That agents and others employed under this appropriation shall be allowed per diem, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in lieu of subsistence at a rate not exceeding $3 per day each and actual necessary expenses for transportation.

For the purpose of showing the necessity for the amendment, I will read a letter which was addressed to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 19th of July last:

In reply to your communication of the 18th instant, calling my attention to the sundry civil bill, page 46, line 16, relative to the appropriation for special agents of this office for the fiscal year 1895, and asking what reasons there are, if any, for an increase of the appropriations over the sum stated therein—

The sum then stated in the bill was $85,000—

I have the honor to reply as follows:

The amount specified on page 46, line 16, of the said bill, viz: $85,000—

The paging of the bill has been changed since then—is entirely inadequate to accomplish the purposes contemplated in the act, and a limitation of the appropriation to that amount will seriously interfere with the public land service. I may also add that the service during the past fiscal year (1894) was greatly crippled owing to the insufficient appropriation of $85,000 for the employment of agents, as the amount of said appropriation only admitted of the constant employment of about twenty-eight special agents to protect the Government's interest during the year, which is included in the vast domain covered by the twenty-seven public land States and Territories.

The amounts appropriated for this service, including deficiencies, have for the past six years prior to the fiscal year of 1894 been as follows: 1888, $136,000; 1889, $195,000; 1890, $232,462.15; 1891, $260,000; 1892, $240,000; 1893, $120,000; during said years the average number of agents employed under the above appropriations was sixty-nine, and in order to protect the Government's interest, the said number of agents were kept constantly employed in the field.

To properly investigate and report upon cases of unlawful cutting and removal of the public timber (in some of the States and Territories amounting to many millions of feet each year), to investigate and report upon applications for permits to cut public timber under the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1093), and to examine the timber areas with a view to the selection of such tracts as may seem desirable and necessary to embrace in forest reservations, provided for in section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1095); also to investigate and report upon attempted fraudulent and illegal acquisition of public lands, and to make personal examination and report as to the character of lands selected by the public-land States as swamp, or appropriated alleged swamp lands for which the States apply for other public lands as indemnity, the following force of agents is absolutely necessary for the purpose, viz:

On timber depredations, and applications for timber permits	12
On forest reservations	15
On fraudulent land entries, etc	20
On swamp lands	3
Total	50

In conclusion I will state that the average amount necessary for the pay and expenses of each agent is $3,000 per annum.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

Now, it will be seen from the letter that it is strictly essential that the number of agents be increased from twenty-eight to fifty in order to protect in the slightest degree the interests of the Government in the preservation of the forest reservations and other timber that is situated upon the public lands.

I think it is evident to all Senators that the timber of this country is being rapidly absorbed, and each year the question of the preservation of our forests and forest reservations becomes greater and more important to us. We who are familiar with that part of the country where the great bulk of the timber is to be found understand full well the depredations which are committed upon the forest reservations of the United States and on timber lands by irresponsible persons. We know the necessity of having faithful agents to preserve the timber against depredations and thefts, to say nothing about the duties which the agents are required to perform by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Commissioner makes it manifest that "to properly investigate and report upon cases of unlawful cutting and removal of the public timber (in some of the States and Territories amounting to many millions of feet each year), to investigate and report upon applications for permits to cut public timber under the act of March 3, 1891, and to examine the timber areas with a view to the selection of such tracts as may seem desirable and necessary to embrace in forest reservations, provided for in section 24 of the act of March 3, 1891; also to investigate and report upon attempted fraudulent and illegal acquisition of public lands, and to make personal examination and report as to the character of lands selected," an increase of the force of agents is absolutely necessary.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Nebraska for a few moments while I submit a report from the special committee.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

RECUSANT WITNESSES.

Mr. GRAY. I submit a report from the special investigating committee in regard to the recusancy of a witness. It is a unanimous report, except that it is accompanied by an additional recommendation from one member of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What action does the Senator from Delaware desire?

Mr. GRAY. I ask that the report be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered without objection.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask that the recommendation of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] in the matter be read. If there is a resolution reported I should like to have the resolution read. I merely want to ascertain the status of the resolutions on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF MR. ALLEN, OF THE COMMITTEE.

In addition to the above recommendation of the committee regarding the witness, Allen Lewis Seymour, I have to say that I think he ought to be brought to the bar of the Senate and be required to there purge himself of the contempt of which he is guilty, or be summarily punished for refusing to do so.

I, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution by the Senate:

"Whereas Allen Lewis Seymour, a witness, was heretofore duly summoned by a select committee of the Senate, and, being lawfully required to testify before said committee, has, as appears by the report of said committee, refused to answer pertinent and material questions propounded to him by said committee: Therefore,

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant in due form under his hand and the seal of the Senate, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring to the bar of the Senate the body of said Allen Lewis Seymour, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the meantime to keep the said Seymour in custody to await the further order of the Senate."

Respectfully submitted,

WM. V. ALLEN.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to make an inquiry. When the first report of this committee was made as to two witnesses who had refused to answer the questions propounded to them, in order to test the sense of the Senate upon the matter I submitted a resolution requiring one of the witnesses to be brought before the bar of the Senate. My resolution went upon the Calendar. I did not embrace the two witnesses, because one would test the question. When the next report was made, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] recommended the adoption of a similar resolution. I see that my resolution is upon the Calendar, but the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska never has appeared upon the Calendar.

I should like to ask as a parliamentary question if the resolution now presented and the previous one should not go to the Calendar as a resolution offered by the minority of the committee for the consideration of the Senate? I should prefer to take up this resolution or the previous resolution of the Senator from Nebraska to the one offered by myself, not because I think that the correspondents of newspapers are any more exempt from answering questions than other persons, but when we come to test that question before the Senate I should like to eliminate from it the question as to the rights of a correspondent. If the resolution does not go upon the Calendar otherwise, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska to move its adoption so that it may go upon the Calendar and be taken up instead of the resolution offered by me.

Mr. GRAY. There is already a resolution on the Calendar, as the Senator from Oregon has stated, which will do to test the sense of the Senate in regard to the proper way to deal with these witnesses, and there are two previous reports accompanied by recommendations on the part of the Senator from Nebraska in regard to witnesses who were not correspondents.

Mr. DOLPH. Do not those resolutions go to the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the matter be printed and go over.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware what portion of the duties of the committee he desired this morning that the committee might be discharged from the further consideration of?

Mr. GRAY. This morning upon making a report from the committee, which was a final report, I also stated that there was a resolution of July 11, ordering the committee to investigate certain allegations in regard to the conduct of railroad companies in this city, and some allegations against Senators in connection therewith; that no proffer of testimony, no communication, or other source of evidence had ever been communicated to the committee, and I asked to be discharged from the further consideration of that resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I objected to that request, not fully understanding what the Senator desired. I make no objection to it; and if the Senator from Delaware desires it, so far as I am concerned, he can have that order made.

Mr. GRAY. I renew my request.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be granted and let the appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the matter referred to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to call attention for a few moments to the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment which he proposes is not in order. It is an amendment to an amendment already made as in Committee of the Whole. It will be in order when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be settled now.

Mr. GORMAN. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not suppose there will be any objection to the amendment whatever. I desire to suggest also that the appropriations in the last six years have been largely in excess, being $50,000 or more in excess of the present appropriation. In 1893 the appropriation was $120,000, a difference of $55,000 between the appropriation of that year and the appropriation proposed by the committee this year.

I do not believe it is the part of wisdom to turn over the public lands and forests of this country to the keeping of timber thieves and the class of men who rob our forests when they are left without the slightest degree of protection. I can understand quite well that an appropriation of this kind if it was in excess of what it ought to be might be used as a means of giving some person or persons employment, so that they might get their hands in the public crib. But I do believe that among the millions of acres (and I think there are something like 13,000,000 acres of forest reservations alone in this country, to say nothing about the vast tracts of public lands that are timbered), a force of twenty-eight men is not sufficient for the purpose of keeping track of the depredations and performing all the duties required of agents of this kind by the present statute.

I am myself not at all in favor of exorbitant appropriations. I want to see this Government, like an economic business man, save dollars wherever it is possible to save them, but I do not believe in that niggardly policy where we save a few thousand dollars in an appropriation of this kind and possibly lose millions of dollars in consequence of the depredations committed upon our timber lands. I am informed that these agents within the last twelve or fourteen months have been able to save the Government ten or twelve times the amount of the appropriations that have been made for the preservation of the forests.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, since the act of 1891 providing for the sale of the timber on these lands under certain restrictions and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Interior Department, there is but little necessity for these agents. There were a great many depredations upon the public timber because the people could not get the timber except by depredating on the lands. Since the Government has adopted a system which we provided for by law, by which a man can cut the timber and pay for it, having it appraised and the amount he is to pay determined beforehand, there has been no complaint that I know of in the West of depredations on the timber. It is cheaper and better for a man to go and pay for it than to steal it. It is true that some time ago there was a good deal of that done, and the Government brought suits and recovered damages; but the matters the Senator speaks of are old occurrences.

As to the depredations on public land, since we provided that every settler should remain upon the land fourteen months all attempts, I think I may say, to get public lands in any other way except in an honest way have ceased. Under the old system, when a man could date back his residence and then immediately prove up, there was a great deal of fraud. That is all done away with by the fact that a man must now remain, after he has filed on his land, fourteen months before he can prove up. So there are no frauds of that kind going on, and this $60,000 is infinitely more for the purpose for which it is required than the large amounts we appropriated in former times. It is a great deal better to use money for other purposes in the West, like surveys of public land, or something of that kind, than for this purpose. I am satisfied that even less than the committee have given will be ample to protect the public land and the timber on the public land.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I trust this amendment will not be adopted, for the reason so clearly stated by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and the reasons furnished the Senate two years ago by nearly every Senator who resided in the States where there are public lands, when by an overwhelming vote of the Senate the appropriation then recommended by the Committee on Appropriations was cut down to $40,000, which was abundant for the service. The Department, however (and there was some excuse for it, because the gentlemen coming in were new, and representations were made to them about frauds, and so on), exceeded the appropriation. They deliberately went to work and appointed agents to go out and allowed them expenses, so that the expenses ran up to $85,000 instead of the $40,000 that was appropriated, and came here asking for a deficiency appropriation of $45,000.

The Committee on Appropriations, after looking at the matter carefully, were convinced that the facts were such as stated by the Senator from Colorado a moment ago, and that money ought to be saved on this particular item. I believe we have given $20,000 more than there is any necessity for appropriating. We should apply what we save in this item, as has been done in the pending bill, to the survey of the public lands, so that people may get homes, and reimburse the States for whatever amount they may have paid for this purpose. Therefore I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. I withdraw the motion, of course, if the Senator from Nebraska wants to be heard.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply desire to say that I can not see how the statement of the Senator from Maryland or the statement of the Senator from Colorado in regard to this matter can be strictly in accordance with the facts. It is well known that we have a great many millions of acres of public lands. It is a well-known fact that we have something like 13,000,000, I think almost 14,000,000, acres of forest reservation, all of which must be cared for in some form. I know of no provision of law which is being enforced for the preservation of these forest reservations.

I do not know of any police force there that is exercising control over these forest reservations, or that is looking after the interests of the Government in the preservation of its timber. Certainly we know in a general way (for that has been the history of the country for the last thirty years, at any rate) that extensive depredations are committed upon the public lands, and timber that is very valuable is cut off and hauled away not only by settlers, but by those who job in timber, furnishing it for mercantile purposes. To say that a band of twenty-eight men (and that is the number employed last year, I understand) can look after the interests of this Government effectually, and preserve our forest reservations and our public lands from the depredations of those who seek to denude them of their forests, it seems to me is simply idle.

Whenever we abandon this branch of the public service and abandon the thought of placing a sufficient number of men in charge of our forest reservations and our public timber lands to effectually preserve them, the Government practically turns over every tree that it owns to the ravages of those who destroy our forests, and we shall lose in consequence of it many millions of dollars. We can take no more effectual way to assist the timber thieves of this country, and there are plenty of them, than to abandon the preservation of the timber lands in this form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CAREY. I move to insert as section 4 of the bill——

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Senator from Wyoming offers his amendment allow me to submit an amendment.

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 46, after line 18, I move to insert:

Recoinage of uncurrent fractional silver coin: For the recoinage of the uncurrent fractional silver coin in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $300,000.

I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending this amendment and that of the Treasurer of the United States may be printed as an executive document to accompany this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request to print will be agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAREY. I move to add, as section 4, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4. That to encourage the reclamation of arid lands, and the cultivation and sale thereof in small tracts to actual settlers, there is hereby reserved for the purposes and upon the conditions provided in this section in each of the States to which the desert-land law of the United States is applicable, and to each of the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and to each of the States that may be formed out the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah, 1,000,000 acres of the surveyed public arid lands in said States, respectively, to be selected by each of said States within ten years after the passage of this act, and such reservation to take effect from the date of such selection and approval and be thereafter withhheld from other disposal, except as hereinafter provided: Provided, That any lands so reserved which shall not be reclaimed within five years from the date of their selection and approval as aforesaid, or as to which the State has not expended or caused to be expended the sum of $3 per acre in works intended for the reclamation of such lands, as now required by the United States desert-land law from claimants thereunder, shall be released from such reservation and become subject to disposal as other public lands of the United States after proclamation by the President so declaring.

That any State accepting the conditions of this section is hereby authorized to make all necessary regulations governing the manner or extent of the reclamation, and to make all contracts to cause said lands to be so reclaimed and settled and cultivated by actual settlers in accordance with such regulations; and as rapidly as the State may furnish competent proof that any of said lands are reclaimed and occupied by actual settlers, in accordance with its said regulations, patents shall issue to the State or its assigns for said lands so reclaimed and settled: Provided, That said States shall not sell or dispose of more than 160 acres of said lands to any one person, and the net proceeds derived by each State from the sale of said lands shall be held and expended as a separate fund to aid the work of reclaiming the lands so reserved by this section, and the surplus, if any, shall be devoted by the State to reclaiming other arid lands in said State.

That all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed arid lands within the meaning of this section, which fact shall be ascertained by affidavit of two or more credible witnesses, filed in the land office of the district in which such land may be situated at the time of the selection thereof, as herein provided: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to authorize the leasing of the lands selected or the disposal or use of them by the States, respectively, in any way whatever except to secure their reclamation, cultivation, and settlement; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, make all rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of this section and to enable the Secretary of the Interior to examine any of the lands that may be selected under the provisions of this section, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,000.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the provisions of this amendment passed the Senate unanimously reported by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, and I understand a favorable report has been agreed upon by the Committee on Irrigation in the House of Representatives. The Commissioner of the General Land Office has approved the measure very highly. I would not ask for its incorporation on this bill were it not for the fact that the Legislatures of all the States to which it applies will be in session next winter, and it will require legislation upon their part to carry the provisions of the act into effect.

I will state that all the land possible to be reserved under the amendment will not be more than two-thirds of the amount that some States received under the swamp-land act.

I will state further that the title of not an acre of land passes out of the Government until its reclamation, and then upon the actual payment and the actual disposal of the land to the settler. There must be something done in the arid-land States and Territories. I do not believe the Treasury of the United States will be in a condition for some years to come where the Government would be willing to appropriate money for the reclamation of lands in the arid States and Territories. It is such a big question that one who is not acquainted with it can scarcely comprehend the amount of labor and the expenditure of money required for the reclamation of arid lands.

I have no doubt that in the State where I live, before all the moisture that is precipitated can be utilized for the reclamation of these lands, it will require from three to four hundred million dollars. As the Commissioner of the General Land Office says in reference to this measure, it is well guarded, and it will be an experiment. No one can lose anything. There can not possibly be any job in it. For these reasons I beg the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to allow the provision to go on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 56, at the end of line 16, I move to add:

And the further sum of $376,000 is hereby appropriated and added to said unexpended balance, to be used by the President only in case of such emergency.

I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee, and also of the Senator from Tennessee, the chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to this amendment. I have ascertained that the unexpended balance of the old appropriation on the 1st of July was $624,000.

The additional sum which I propose will put at the service of the President for any threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, yellow fever, or smallpox, $1,000,000 in a round sum. It is not put at the disposal of the head of the Treasury Department in the ordinary way, but it is an emergency fund to be expended only by the personal direction of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, Congress will be absent from this city, I hope, during August, September, October, and November—four months. The cholera has already broken out in various places in Europe. It seems to me that we ought to be willing, as Democrats, as Republicans, to trust the President of the United States with this sum of $1,000,000, so that in case the cholera does penetrate this country, he may not find it necessary to call Congress together in order to ask for a further appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, for quite a number of years there have been similar appropriations made of varying amounts. I think I am perfectly warranted in saying that there has never been a dollar of such appropriations expended that was not absolutely necessary. I believe I am warranted in saying that the maximum amount of the appropriation has never been reached, but from year to year a large proportion of the appropriations have remained in the Treasury and have not been used. If the emergency shall come it is a matter of supreme importance that there should be a fund within the discretion of the President or some other official of the Government.

Therefore we have left it invariably to the discretion of the President, and I think it proper so to leave it. If such emergency shall come it is vitally important that we should have an ample fund to meet it as best the science and skill of the country can meet it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not $624,000 ample to meet it at least until the 4th of next March?

Mr. HARRIS. That is a question which no living man can anticipate or answer for the future. But if you shall appropriate $1,000,000, not a dollar of it will be used unless it is absolutely necessary to meet an emergency of the highest character. Otherwise every dollar of it will remain in the Treasury. The fund of the Treasury will not be impaired except by the expenditures in such an emergency. There can be no danger in making this appropriation. No harm can come to the country. An emergency may arise which will make it immensely important that the fund should be subject to the order and in the discretion of some official, and I think the President is the proper person.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 130, after line 4, I move to add:

Massachusetts avenue: For grading Massachusetts avenue as extended around the Naval Observatory circle, $10,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that amendment will not be put on the bill, and I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist on it. It belongs to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the provision was made on that bill, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, the Senator will remember that the bill for defining Massachusetts avenue around the Observatory circle was only signed by the President day before yesterday, and the estimate of $10,000 was left out of the District of Columbia appropriation bill for that reason. There is a unanimous agreement among the conferees on the District of Columbia appropriation bill that this appropriation shall go upon this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Being one of the conferees, I never heard of a unanimous agreement to that effect.

Mr. CHANDLER. All the members of the committee said yes, except the Senator from Missouri, and he looked very good-natured when the suggestion was made.

I have moved the amendment by the request of the chairman of the House committee. If the Senator will let it go on the bill it will go out of course in conference if he thinks it ought to go out. I do not wish to be unreasonable with the Senator.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all right. Let the amendment be inserted, page 55, at the end of line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be inserted at that point. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in search of information, and I wish before the bill is finally passed upon to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for some information concerning one matter that I find in the bill. On page 93 there are two paragraphs which read as follows:

Support and medical treatment of destitute patients: For the support and medical treatment of ninety-five medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $19,000.

Garfield Memorial Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to persons unable to pay therefor, $19,000.

Mr. President, what I want to know is this: On the District appropriation bill there were certain appropriations made for hospitals named in the city of Washington. The Providence Hospital and the Garfield Memorial Hospital, I think, are not in that list, but the appropriations made in the District bill are paid one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the revenues of the General Government.

I am at a loss to understand why these two hospitals should be given an appropriation of $19,000 each, as provided in this bill, and the entire amount be paid from the revenues of the General Government. There is probably some reason for it, but I do not understand it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think there is any special reason, except that the House of Representatives sent us the bill in that form, and we have to take it as it is or have a wrangle over it. I think myself it ought to be changed so that the District should pay one-half, but others do not think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is another matter in connection with this. The appropriation for the Providence Hospital specifies that they shall have 95 patients, for which they shall receive $19,000, or $200 per patient. That strikes me as being a very remarkable provision. I do not know how long patients are sick in hospitals in the city of Washington, but it seems to me they do not average an expense of $200 each, yet this lump amount is given to this hospital, and there are to be 95 patients, and no more, and the hospital is to get this compensation for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is under some agreement or understanding that the authorities have had for years.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that the appropriations for those two hospitals as made in this bill are all wrong. I know of no reason why the General Government should be supporting one or more hospitals in the city of Washington. I will take as an illustration the Providence Hospital. My investigation, made very hurriedly, it is true, because I simply noticed this yesterday, shows that the Government has been making appropriations for Providence Hospital since the year 1864. It has been suggested somewhere that an amount aggregating more than half a million dollars has been paid to this hospital by the Government of the United States. I do know that for the last ten years—because I looked it up yesterday—the aggregate appropriations amounted to $176,000. I see no remedy for this condition of things this year. I was inclined to move an amendment striking out these two paragraphs and inserting:

For the support and medical treatment of destitute medical and surgical patients in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the different hospitals by the Surgeon-General, $38,000, one-half to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and one-half from the revenues of the General Government.

There may be objections to that. I am not very well informed on the subject, and I shall not move the amendment, but I will make this suggestion in closing my observations, that I propose between now and the time when another sundry civil appropriation bill comes before the Senate, to endeavor to get additional light on the subject of the appropriation for hospitals in the District of Columbia, to the end that we may do justice to all the hospitals, and that we may do justice to the General Government in the matter of appropriating money for purposes of this kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will give us his assistance in that way. Being himself a physician, he knows more about the subject than we do, and I hope he will give us his aid. We shall be very thankful to him for any suggestions he may make.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 16, on page 55, it is proposed to insert:

For constructing an elevator in the Home for Incurables, in West Washington, and for providing the necessary power to operate the same, $2,600, to be paid to and expended under the direction of the board of directors of said institution.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in explanation of that amendment.

This beautiful charity was instituted in Washington by the ladies, and has been sustained by them from the beginning by their own personal exertions. I am informed that they have about forty patients, and they sustain them in a very comfortable way in a home which has been built on purpose for them out of moneys that they have received by contributions from different persons, and upon a lot that was donated to them by some benevolent lady, whose name I do not know, and I believe nobody else knows it outside of the board.

Those ladies have built this comfortable house for incurables. They have, as I remarked, about forty patients from the different races. They are persons who are totally unable to assist themselves, and there is no hope of their ever being cured. That constitutes, in my mind, the great beauty of the charity. In building this house they have made a shaft for an elevator, but they have not had the money as yet to build it or to get the machinery or the power necessary to work it. Of course, these poor people have to be lifted up and down the stairways by help, and that is a very great tax upon the income of the home.

I am informed, Mr. President, that that home is about as well conducted as any could be, and that the advantages of benefaction which have been derived from it are very singularly excellent and beautiful.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia recommended this appropriation, and I had that recommendation sent before the Committee on the District of Columbia. They, as I am informed, united in the recommendation, and it went to the Committee on Appropriations. So the amendment is entirely in order. Because this institution has never before, however, been recognized as one of those which the law would provide for, the committee did not think that it was proper, perhaps, on this occasion or on this bill to insert it, but I hope that hereafter it is an institution which will be provided for. There is nothing that more earnestly demands our attention as benevolent people than to provide for the comfort and the well-being of those who are incurable and absolutely unable to help themselves.

I happen to know personally two or three of the patients who are in that hospital, and they are people who heretofore were persons of wealth and entirely able to take care of themselves, but, through the vicissitudes of fortune, they have been brought to poverty and utter disability.

I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment, and that the House of Representatives will concur in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was diverted when the amendment now under consideration was read. I ask the Senator from Alabama if that is the amendment providing an appropriation for an elevator in the Home for Incurables?

Mr. MORGAN. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply say that I hope the amendment will be adopted. The same objection which I urged to the appropriations for two of the hospitals would apply to this, that one-half should come out of the funds of the District, but I shall not urge that point.

I am acquainted with the Home for Incurables in this city. It is one of the best charities which has ever been established anywhere; it is delightfully situated, the attendance is as good as can possibly be secured, and the patients going there to die never make any complaint so far as the attention they receive is concerned.

In regard to this matter of an elevator, a few months ago a very dear friend of mine was carried to that home, a man who was laid away this afternoon. He was given the most comfortable room which could be secured for him in the building, but was compelled to leave that institution and go to his own humble home in the city of Washington for the reason that he could not get out on the grounds; he had not the strength to travel up and down stairs, and had to leave the institution, where he had probably better care than he could get at home. He said to me that he did not understand why Congress did not appropriate a little money to put an elevator in that institution.

I hope, Mr. President, the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. By direction of the Committee on Immigration I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, before line 19, it is proposed to add:

The chief of the Bureau of Immigration shall hereafter be designated as the Commissioner-General of Immigration.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. It changes existing law, and we can get along for the present under the existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a mere verbal change.

Mr. COCKRELL. It nevertheless changes the existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was unanimously instructed to report the amendment by direction of the committee of which the Senator from Missouri is a member, and I assure him that all the conclusions of that committee, whether he be present or absent, are very carefully and deliberately reached and entered upon. I hope he will not object to the amendment now, for he can strike it out in conference; but I do not like him to discredit a committee of which he himself is a member.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. That it is new legislation and changes existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. GORMAN, and Mr. ALLISON were appointed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield to me for the consideration of a bill which will take but a few moments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

PERDIDO RIVER BRIDGE BETWEEN FLORIDA AND ALABAMA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7827) to authorize a bridge across the Perdido River between the States of Florida and Alabama be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to insert at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved whenever Congress may consider it necessary.

Mr. PLATT. I should think that amendment had better have some words stricken from the end of it. I think we had better reserve the right to amend now, than to reserve the right to amend whenever Congress thinks it necessary, as is stated in the latter part of the amendment. I move to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "reserved," it is proposed to strike out "whenever Congress may consider it necessary."

Mr. PASCO. How will the amendment then read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed to be amended will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. PASCO. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COURT IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2173, known as the Indian Territory court bill, which was passed the other day and reconsidered for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is not present, to offer some amendments, which I shall offer for him.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Colorado state what the bill is?

Mr. TELLER. It is the Indian court bill. I have some amendments to offer which were prepared by the Senator's colleague. I will say that I have submitted the amendments to the committee, and the committee agreed to them. I think they improve the bill.

On page 3, section 1, I move to strike out lines 32, 33, and 34, and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, it is proposed to strike out from line 32 to line 34, inclusive, as follows:

That the Attorney-General of the United States may, if in his judgment it shall be necessary, appoint an additional assistant attorney for said district.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Attorney-General of the United States shall appoint three assistant attorneys for said districts who shall perform the duties to which they may be assigned by the United States district attorney for the Indian Territory, and who shall receive such compensation as is now allowed by law to the assistant United States attorneys for the western district of Arkansas, together with actual traveling expenses when upon Government business.

It shall be the duty of the United States attorney for the Indian Territory, in addition to his present duties, to supervise and conduct all prosecutions before the commissioners provided for by this act in person or by his deputies, and he shall receive for his services one-half the fees now allowed him by law in such cases when instituted in the United States court of said Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move, on page 8, line 44, after the word "jury," to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, on page 8, line 44, after the word "jury," it is proposed to insert "said amount to be taxed as costs and repaid to the defendant if acquitted of the charge made against him."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 10, at the end of section 3, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 it is proposed to insert:

The fees of such commissioners and constables shall be those allowed the justices of the peace and constables by the statutes of Arkansas in like cases, but the aggregate amount of fees received in any one year by each of said commissioners and constables shall not exceed $2,000, the excess of fees collected by them above said amount to be accounted for and paid over by such commissioners and constables to the clerk of the United States court of the Indian Territory, who shall pay the same to the proper accounting officers of the United States Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES FAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 7683) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay was read twice by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report that bill favorably, and I ask that it be acted upon now. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. Has that bill been reported by any committee?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It has been reported by the Naval Committee.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw that motion in order that we may have a brief executive session.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion in order that the bill which has been laid before the Senate may be passed.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion to accommodate the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7683) to remove the charge of desertion against James Fay.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to amend the title to conform with the body of the bill, so as to read "A bill to correct the naval record of James Fay and grant him an honorable discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7803) to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes. It is in a different form, but precisely to the same effect, as a bill which has already passed the Senate. The bill is very short, and I do not think there can be any objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend sections 2401 and 2403 of the Revised Statutes, so as to make them read:

SEC. 2401. When the settlers in any township, not mineral or reserved by the Government, or persons and associations lawfully possessed of coal lands and otherwise qualified to make entry thereof, or when the owners or grantees of public lands of the United States, under any law thereof, desire a survey made of the same under the authority of the surveyor-general and shall file an application therefor in writing, and shall deposit in a proper United States depository to the credit of the United States, a sum sufficient to pay for such survey, together with all expenditures incident thereto, without cost or claim for indemnity on the United States, it shall be lawful for the surveyor-general, under such instructions as may be given him by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in accordance with law, to survey such township or such public lands owned by said grantees of the Government, and make return therefor to the general and proper local land office: Provided, That no application shall be granted unless the township so proposed to be surveyed is within the range of the regular progress of the public surveys embraced by existing standard lines or bases for township and subdivisional surveys.

SEC. 2403. Where settlers or owners or grantees of public lands make deposits in accordance with the provisions of section 2401, as hereby amended, certificates shall be issued for such deposits which may be used by settlers in part payment for the lands settled upon by them, the survey of which is paid for out of such deposits, or said certificates may be assigned by indorsement and may be received by the Government in payment for any public lands of the United States entered or to be entered under the laws thereof.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the fact that some years ago the provisions of law allowing the certificates to be assigned were repealed. I do not think that is the law now.

Mr. DOLPH. I will read to the Senator from the communication of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which was read in the debate in the House of Representatives on this bill. He said:

The triplicate certificates issued for such deposits prior to March 3, 1879, can be used only by the settlers in the purchase of lands in the township the surveying of which was paid for out of such deposits;

The triplicate certificates issued subsequent to March 3, 1879, and prior to August 7, 1882, may be assigned by indorsement and used in payment for lands entered under the homestead and preëmption laws in any land district; and

Triplicate certificates issued on and after August 7, 1882, can be received in payment for lands only at the land office in which the lands surveyed for which the deposit was made are subject to entry, and not elsewhere.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will move to amend that provision so that the certificates assigned shall not be used in distant States to enter lands. The complaint was made, and that was the reason for the change—I have forgotten the exact facts—that these surveys were made in California and other States and then the certificates were used in taking up lands in the Dakotas and in Nebraska, and it came to be a very great abuse, which was corrected in this way. I do not know the precise provisions of this bill.

Mr. DOLPH. After the words "United States," in line 12 of section 2, I move to insert the words "in the States where the surveys were made."

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment will be satisfactory to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, line 12, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert "in the States where the surveys were made;" so as to read:

Said certificates may be assigned by indorsement, and may be received by the Government in payment for any public lands of the United States in the States where the surveys were made, entered, or to be entered under the laws thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I move that the Senate ask for a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment, which only inserts a few words.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PASCO, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. DOLPH were appointed.

SALE OF LOT IN HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw it for any purpose which will not take time.

Mr. BERRY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6042) to authorize sale of lot 8, block 93, city of Hot Springs, by school directors thereof, and use of proceeds for school purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and at (5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, August 3, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

CHOCTAW COAL AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7680) to authorize purchasers of the property and franchises of the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company to organize a corporation and to confer upon the same all the powers, privileges, and franchises vested in that company.

Whereas the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, and now doing business in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory under and by virtue of certain acts of Congress empowering it so to do, is insolvent, and in order to enable the creditors and stockholders of the same to reorganize said company in such a way as to secure the completion of the railroad authorized to be constructed by said company, a sale of its property and franchises is necessary: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the persons for or on whose account the rights of way, railroads, mines, coal leasehold estates, and other property, and the franchises of the said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company shall be purchased and acquired under and by virtue of any sale of the same made under any process or decree of any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be, and are hereby, constituted a corporation, and shall be vested with all the right, title, interest, property, possession, claim, and demand in law and equity, of, in, and to such rights of way, railroads, mines, coal leasehold estates, and property of the said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, and with all the rights, powers, immunities, privileges, and franchises which have been heretofore granted to or conferred upon said company by any act or acts of Congress or of the State of Minnesota, or which it possesses by virtue of its charter under the laws of said State, with the same force and effect as if the provisions of said acts were herein fully reënacted and made applicable to such new corporation.

SEC. 2. That the persons for or on whose account the hereinbefore-mentioned property of the said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company may have been purchased shall meet within thirty days after the conveyance thereof shall have been delivered, and organize such new corporation by electing a president and board of nine directors (to continue in office until the second Monday of January succeeding such meeting, when, and annually thereafter, on the said day, a like election for a president and nine directors shall be held to serve for one year), and shall adopt a corporate name and common seal, determine the amount of capital stock thereof, and shall have power and authority to make and issue certificates therefor to the purchasers aforesaid, to the amount of their respective interests therein, in shares of $50 each, and may then, or at any time thereafter, create and issue preferred stock to such an amount and on such terms as they may deem necessary, and from time to time to issue bonds, and to secure the same by one or more mortgages upon the real and personal property and corporate rights and franchises, or either or any part or parts thereof.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of such new corporation, within one calendar month after its organization, to make a certificate thereof under its common seal, attested by the signature of its president, specifying the date of such organization, the name so adopted, the amount of capital stock, and the names of its president and directors, and transmit the said certificate to the Secretary of the Interior, to be filed in his office, and there remain of record; and a certified copy of such certificate so filed shall be evidence of the corporate existence of said new corporation. And such new corporation shall also, within the said thirty days, cause to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a copy certified to as correct by the clerk of the court under whose orders or decrees said sale shall have been made, of any conveyance made to it under or by virtue of said sale of the rights of way, railroads, mines, coal leasehold estates, and other property of the said Choctaw Coal and Railway Company, and this act shall be construed and treated as an assent upon the part of the United States to the acquisition and holding by such new corporation of the estates and premises thereby conveyed: Provided, however, That as to all coal leasehold estates or leases of rights to mine coal in the Choctaw Nation, such assent shall be upon condition that the said new corporation shall conform to all the provisions, conditions, and limitations contained in the act approved October 1, 1890, entitled "An act giving, upon conditions and limitations therein contained, the assent of the United States to certain leases of right to mine coal in the Choctaw Nation."

SEC. 4. That it shall and may be lawful for such new corporation to construct and operate branches from its said railroad and for such purpose to take and use rights of way not exceeding 100 feet in width upon making compensation therefor as provided in the case of taking land for its main line, and to lease its railroads and mines and other property to any company owning or operating a railroad connecting with the railroad of said new corporation on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon.

SEC. 5. That the said corporation, when organized as hereinbefore provided, shall have and possess perpetual succession and shall be able to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, in all courts of record and elsewhere, and shall have power to ordain, establish, and put in execution such by-laws and regulations as shall be proper, necessary, or convenient for the government of the said corporation, not being contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and generally to do all and singular the matters and things which shall be necessary or convenient to enable the said company to maintain, use, and operate their railroads and mines in conformity with the provisions of the acts of Congress relating to or affecting the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company.

SEC. 6. That the stockholders of the company shall meet on the second Monday in January in every year at such place as may be fixed on by the by-laws, notice of which meeting shall be given in the manner that may be designated by the by-laws, and choose, by a majority of the voters present, a president and nine directors for the ensuing year, who shall continue in office until the next annual election and until others are chosen; at which annual meeting the said stockholders shall have full power and authority to make, order, or repeal, by a majority of votes given, any or all such by-laws, rules, orders, and regulations as aforesaid, and to do and perform every other corporate act authorized by their charter; the stockholders may meet at such other times and places as they may be summoned by the president and directors, in such manner and form and giving such notice as may be prescribed by the by-laws. At all meetings stockholders may be represented and vote by proxy.

SEC. 7. That the election for president and directors provided for in this act shall be conducted as follows: The directors for the time being shall appoint three stockholders to be judges of the said election and to hold the same; the persons so appointed shall not be eligible to an election as president or director at said election and shall, respectively, take and subscribe an oath or affirmation before a notary public or other officer qualified to administer oaths well and truly and according to law to conduct such election to the best of their knowledge and ability; and the said judges shall decide upon the qualifications of voters and when the election is closed shall count the votes and declare who have been elected; and if at any time it shall happen that an election of directors shall not be made at the time specified, the corporation shall not for that reason be dissolved, but it shall be lawful to hold and make such election of directors on any day within three months thereafter by giving at least ten days previous notice of the time and place of holding said election in the manner aforesaid, and the directors of the preceding year shall in that case continue in office, and be invested with all powers belonging to them as such until others are elected in their stead. In case of the death or resignation of a director, or a failure to elect in case of a tie vote, the vacancy may be filled by the board of directors. At all general meetings or elections by the stockholders, each share of stock shall entitle the holder thereof to one vote, and each ballot shall have indorsed thereon the number of shares represented; but no share or shares transferred within sixty days next preceding any election or general meeting of the stockholders shall entitle the holder or holders thereof to vote at any such election or general meeting, nor shall any proxy be received or entitle the holder to vote unless the same shall bear date and have been duly executed within the three months next preceding such election or general meeting.

"SEC. 8. Congress may any time amend, alter, or repeal this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I hope there will be some explanation of this bill, so that it may be understood.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas will make an explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN. This seems to affect the Choctaw Nation, and I do not know in what particular.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Indiana I will say that the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company is a corporation chartered under the general laws of Minnesota, and operating a railroad and coal mines in the Choctaw Nation in the Indian Territory and in the Territory of Oklahoma. The railroad undertook the construction of this line, beginning at both ends, and built in the Choctaw Nation from Wister Junction, on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad, to South McAlester, on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, a distance of something like 65 miles, and on the west they built from Fort Reno to Oklahoma City, a distance of about 31 miles, making about 96 miles and possibly 97 miles of road which have been constructed, leaving a gap of 120 miles unbuilt.

The road is now insolvent, and has been in the hands of a receiver for something like three years. The judge of the court has ordered a sale of the property, to take place on the 8th of September; and in view of this sale the creditors and a majority of the stockholders have perfected a plan of reorganization, and they desire to reorganize under a law of Congress. It is clearly within the power of Congress to grant a charter in a Territory, and there is a special reason why Congress should act in the Indian Territory. The gentlemen who are to furnish the money to rehabilitate this enterprise and to construct the gap are not willing to furnish it under a charter which enables them to go there as a mere matter of sufferance.

I say to the gentleman from Indiana, who is chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the Indians themselves are very anxious to have the road completed. It strikes me that there can be no possible objection to this measure; and I will say to him that the committee has authorized me to report several amendments making further safeguards, and also an amendment providing that "Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal the charter."

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill comes from the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object, Mr. Speaker, but this measure in some form is before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and that committee would seem to have jurisdiction of it in the first instance.

Mr. BAILEY. No; because this bill creates a corporation, and all bills of that character go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Where a bill confers any rights affecting the Indians, of course the subject should properly go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not remember at this moment what member of that committee has charge of the measure on this subject that is pending before it, but this is quite an important matter, and there has been a good deal of correspondence in regard to it, and I hardly know what to say.

Mr. BAILEY. I assume that there can hardly have been any correspondence about this, because there is no objection to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes. The subject has been up in various forms.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. This matter was before our committee. The right to build this road was granted several years ago, and last fall—nearly a year ago now—we had up for consideration the question of extending the time within which the road should be built, and we recommended the extension; so I infer that, so far as the rights of the Indians are concerned, they have been already acted upon by the Indian Committee, and, so far as that feature of the case is concerned, this bill simply authorizes this company to do what the Committee on Indian Affairs had recommended that they be authorized to do.

Mr. BAILEY. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that one reason why it is necessary to pass this bill now is that the sale is to take place on the 8th of September. These people have more than $2,000,000 invested there in good faith, and it seems entirely proper that they should be permitted to organize under a law giving them the right to be there, instead of being there, as they are now, merely on sufferance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not been able to give the matter any personal attention, but a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs have had it in charge, and, as I said before, there has been a good deal of correspondence about it one way and another. However, inasmuch as this measure would fairly go to the Judiciary Committee as well as to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I hardly feel justified in interposing an objection to the consideration of the bill. This, I understand, is a House bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, there is an error in the print of the amendment, in lines 21 and 22, on page 4. As printed, it reads: "Subject to the rights of said corporation to be thereafter acquired," etc. It should be made to read: "Subject to the right of said corporation to thereafter acquire."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary were adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPRESSION OF LOTTERY TRAFFIC.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, being an act (S. 1620) for the suppression of lottery traffic through national and interstate commerce and the postal service subject to the jurisdiction and laws of the United States.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DAVEY. I object.

CYRUS PAYNE.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 829) granting an honorable discharge to Cyrus Payne.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is, authorized to cause to be revoked and set aside so much of "Special Orders, numbered 398, War Department, Adjutant-General's Office, November 15, 1864," as confirms so much of "Special Orders, numbered 296, Headquarters Department of the Gulf, New Orleans, November 1, 1864," as dismissed Lieut. Cyrus Payne, Eighteenth Regiment New York Cavalry, for perpetrating frauds upon the Government, and then to cause to be revoked and set aside so much of "Special Orders, numbered 296, Headquarters Department of the Gulf, New Orleans, November 1, 1864," as dismissed said First Lieut. Payne, Eighteenth New York Cavalry, and to cause to be issued to said Lieut. Payne a certificate of honorable muster out of the service as of the date of the 27th day of May, 1865. And said Cyrus Payne shall not, by reason of this act, be entitled to any pay or allowance subsequent to said last-named date.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to make an inquiry. I would like to know why it is that we are asked to consider this bill at this time; why it is regarded as meritorious enough to have the right of way this morning?

Mr. PENCE. I can answer that question if I am permitted.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman may make a brief explanation.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and passed by the Senate. It came to this House, was considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and was unanimously reported by that committee.

Mr. KILGORE. Is this a bill to remove the charge of desertion?

Mr. PENCE. No; it is a bill to remove a record of dishonorable dismissal. Briefly, the facts of the case are these: Mr. Payne, while a prisoner in the hands of some Texas Confederate regiment, I do not know whether it was my friend's regiment or not——

Mr. KILGORE. If he came down there, we caught him. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENCE. Well, you did catch him, and while you held him prisoner he was tried upon the charge of having made money out of the bounties of certain colored cooks. Later he escaped, or you let him go; at all events he got away from his Texas captors and reëntered the service, and continued to serve for some months, and never until long afterwards discovered that there had been an order made dismissing him. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will bear me out in this statement of the case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman from Colorado has not made it clear that Lieut. Payne was tried and convicted in his absence, and then was permitted to return to the service and serve a considerable period of time before he became aware of the action taken in his absence, while he was a prisoner.

Mr. KILGORE. Do I understand that he was tried and convicted while he was held a prisoner by the Confederates?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PENCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY TRIAL OF PRIVATE CEDARQUIST.

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] rises to a privileged question. The House will please be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. On the 20th of July last I introduced in this House a resolution, a copy of which I hold in my hand and which is familiar to members who have paid attention to the Journal of our proceedings. It recites the publication in the New York World and divers other newspapers, of a statement that a certain soldier by the name of Cedarquist belonging to the regular Army had been punished very severely by the judgment of a court-martial because he had refused to obey the orders of a superior officer directing him to engage in target shooting on the Sabbath day; and that the sentence had been approved by a general of the regular Army, and the punishment as commuted was being inflicted.

I want to say at this point that I never heard of this soldier before I read the newspaper article; later Hon. DAVID MERCER of Nebraska called my attention to it; and my action in this matter has been purely voluntary—possibly intrusive upon the business of others. The resolution called for a report from the War Department in answer to this inquiry. By reason of some failure in the Clerk's office of the House, the resolution did not reach the Committee on Military Affairs in time to have proper action taken under the rules. However, Mr. Speaker, the War Department was furnished with a copy of the resolution by the chairman, I believe, of the Military Committee; and the report of the court-martial which tried the soldier has been furnished. I have a copy of it in my hand, and will embody it in my remarks.

It appears by the record of the court-martial that on the day in question some officer of the United States Army ordered the company of troops to which Cedarquist belonged to go upon a rifle range somewhere in the neighborhood of Omaha and engage in the business of firing at target. It appears by the record that the soldier respectfully declined to go, stating at the time that it was improper and unlawful to make such a requirement, and that he was conscientiously opposed to doing that duty on the Sabbath day. He was, however, tried, and was sentenced to be imprisoned for six months and to forfeit $10 a month of his monthly pay during the whole of that time.

The commanding officer, to whom the record went in due course according to the regulations of the Army, approved the finding of the court-martial, but, as I observe, remitted without any comment all of the penalty except two months of imprisonment and the forfeiture of pay, I believe, during that time.

The War Department has furnished from the office of the Judge-Advocate-General a record of the trial; and it appears that the young man is a conscientious member of the church. The testimony of his pastor is that he is orderly, well-behaved, and conscientious; and the testimony of others is that his action was not insubordinate in form, but was simply a protest against the order of his superior officer—the protest of an honest man against a violation of law.

The report made by the Judge-Advocate-General, or rather the Acting Judge-Advocate-General, is a matter on which I wish to comment very briefly. That officer has no sort of doubt as to the propriety of all that was done; and he calls attention to the fact that it is not for a soldier to raise the question of the legality of the order of his superior officer—on which point I wish to say I quite agree with that gentleman; and it is the only thing that he has uttered with which I do agree. And yet this position is subject to certain modifications. No superior officer can command, lawfully, his inferior to violate the law.

But the real question here was not as to the right of the soldier to refuse to obey his superior officer. The question that I wanted to make was, What sort of a condition is there in the Army when such a judgment and finding of a court-martial can be approved and executed? Because, after we leave the simple garrison court-martial and begin to ascend the ladder, we come directly to a brigadier-general; and that brigadier-general in this case seems to have been inflated with the notion that somehow or other all the laws of the country, all the laws of God and man, and all the orders of his superior officers, were wholly unimportant when weighed in the balance against the judgment of that court-martial.

I undertake to say in very few words that the action of this brigadier-general was either the outgrowth, the complete and successful development, of the most stolid and inconceivable ignorance, or else a total disregard of all that is proper, just, and right.

Then we come to the action of a bureau of this Government which is attached to the War Department; and we find a person there who undertakes to justify the action of this court-martial.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that the order of the superior officer, who ordered this private soldier to go out shooting on Sunday, was in plain violation of the orders of the President of the United States. It was also in direct violation of the statute of Nebraska; but that was unimportant, possibly, as compared with the fact that it was in direct violation of the order issued by President Lincoln, which is to-day the law of the Army of the United States, and which has been reiterated by every successive President whenever it was important to do so.

So this officer of the War Department sends an official communication which finally comes to Congress and will finally go into the records of Congress, showing that there was an "exigency," and that all these orders and all these rules of conduct and all these rights of man and this duty to God may be set aside whenever there is an "exigency." And what do you think that "exigency" was?

Why, there was a company of soldiers that was lacking a little in the full achievement, the full complement, of their target practice; and there was danger that they might be called out in a few days to shoot rioters somewhere along the line of the railroad! And thus the exigency arose requiring that they have one more day of target practice before they were called on to shoot rioters. And that, he says, is a sufficient exigency to overcome the law of the country, the law of Nebraska, the law of the people of the United States of America, and the law of God.

That is all I desire to say, except that it is a great misfortune to find that a great bureau of the Government of the United States should have to depend for its legal action, where the rights of a man, or where a man's liberty is at stake, upon the knowledge or lack of knowledge of a man thus shown to be utterly ignorant of every principle of law, utterly oblivious of all the rights of his fellow-citizens, and utterly unable to comprehend the lines of demarcation that justify resistance to oppression.

I ought to say, and will add simply this, and then I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs: That I congratulate the people of this country that there is a source of power in the country greater than the Judge-Advocate-General's Office; and that upon his own motion, whether suggested by this resolution or not, I know not and do not care, the President of the United States called for this record of infamy, as I denominate it, but of injustice at least, and has issued an order voicing the intelligent judgment of all the patriotic citizens of this country, executing the will of a great people, recognizing the law of the country, the law both written and unwritten, and the law of Christianity, and the law of God, and has directed that this soldier be released at once from imprisonment, that the unpaid penalty shall be remitted; and he has gone even further than that, and I honor his courage and honor his integrity; he has ordered that this officer who ordered a private soldier to go on duty on the Sabbath, and when he resisted preferred charges against him, because in his conscience and sense of duty he could not comply with the order—he has ordered the officer to be arrested, tried, and punished for disobedience of the orders of the President of the United States, and that the remainder of the penalty be remitted and the soldier restored to duty. And so my mission is ended; possibly it need not have begun. [Applause.]

The papers referred to by Mr. GROSVENOR in the foregoing remarks are as follows:

CASES TRIED AT FORT OMAHA, NEBR.

* * * * * * *

PARAGRAPH 2.

Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE PLATTE,
Omaha, Nebr., July 13, 1894.

[General Court-martial Orders No. 45.]

* * * * * * *

II. Before a general court-martial which convened at Fort Omaha, Nebr., pursuant to paragraph 2, Special Orders No. 58, and paragraph 3, Special Orders No. 59, current series, from these headquarters, of which Capt. James Ulio, Second Infantry, is president, and Second Lieut. John L. Hines, Second Infantry, is judge-advocate, was arraigned and tried:

Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry.

Charge.—"Disobedience of orders, in violation of the twenty-first article of war."

Specification.—"That Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry, having been ordered by his superior officer, Second Lieut. Edwin V. Bookmiller, Second Infantry, in the execution of his office, to take a rifle and proceed at once with his target practice, did refuse to obey and did disobey said order. This at Bellevue Rifle Range, Bellevue, Nebr., June 17, 1894."

Pleas.—"In bar of trial." Not sustained by the court. The accused then pleaded "Not guilty."

Findings.—"Guilty."

Sentence.—"To be confined at hard labor under charge of the guard for the period of six months, and to forfeit to the United States $10 per month of his pay for the same period."

In the foregoing case of Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry, the defense was practically limited to the contention that the order in respect of which disobedience was charged was an unlawful one in that, first, it enjoined a duty to be performed on Sunday in violation of orders and regulations limiting Sunday labor in the Army to the measure of strict necessity; and second, that the act required to be done would have been a violation of section 241 of the criminal code of Nebraska.

That a commanding officer has a discretion under existing orders to require target practice by his command on Sunday in a case of necessity, is undoubted. The evidence in this case fails to fix upon the commanding officer of Bellevue rifle range, Nebraska, any abuse of discretion in the issue of the order complained of by the accused. The legality of that order and the obligation of the accused to obey it when duly transmitted to him can not, in the opinion of the reviewing authority, be questioned. It was not for him to judge the necessity for the issue of the order. That discretion pertained to his commanding officer, and once exercised, whether erroneously or not, it was the duty of the accused to obey.

The further point repeatedly urged upon the attention of the court that compliance by the accused with the order given him would have rendered him liable to the penalties prescribed in section 241 of the criminal code of Nebraska, is thought to be equally untenable with the first. It is conceded that soldiers stationed at Bellevue rifle range, Nebraska, who, as individuals, engage in hunting and shooting on Sunday would be within the provisions of the section referred to and liable to its penalties; but, after careful consideration, the reviewing authority is of the opinion that the State could not make it, nor has it, by this section or any other legislation to which his attention has been called, attempted to make the performance on Sunday of target practice or any other duty pertaining to the instruction and discipline of the Army, a criminal offense.

The occasion is deemed opportune for inviting attention of the department to the fact that the obligations of the military service will never permit a soldier to refuse obedience to an order because, in his judgment, it is an unnecessary one. The justification of an order will generally depend upon circumstances of which he can not be fully advised. His duty is to accord all orders not palpably illegal on their face a most unhesitating obedience, and court-martial will be uniformly upheld in the rigorous application of this principle in the administration of military justice in this department.

The sentence is approved, but in view of the peculiar circumstances attending the commission of the offense, is mitigated to confinement at hard labor for two months at the station of his company. It is desired, however, that it shall be understood that, in view of the warning held out in this order, offenses of the character charged in this case will not in the future be regarded as fitting ones for the exercise of clemency.

By command of Brig. Gen. Brooke:

THEO. SCHWAN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Second Lieutenant Third Infantry, Aide-de-Camp.

[Fifty-third Congress, second session.]

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives, July 20, 1894.

Mr. GROSVENOR submitted the following, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"Whereas the following statement is being widely published in the press of the country:

"'CEDARQUIST HAD SCRUPLES—WOULDN'T DO TARGET PRACTICE ON SUNDAY AND MUST GO TO PRISON.

"'OMAHA, NEBR., July 14.

"'Charles O. Cedarquist, private, Company A, Second Infantry, has been court-martialed and sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for six months, with forfeiture of $10 per month of his pay for the same period.

"'Cedarquist refused to go to target practice on Sunday on the grounds that his religious scruples would not allow him to violate the Sabbath day by discharging fire arms. The defense contended that the order was unlawful, in that it enjoined a duty in violation of orders and regulations limiting Sunday labor in the Army to the measure of strict necessity, and that the act required to be done would have been a violation of the law of Nebraska.

"'Brig. Gen. Brooke affirmed the finding, but ordered, in view of the peculiar circumstances attending the offense, that the sentence be reduced to two months' imprisonment; therefore

"Resolved, That the Honorable Secretary of War be requested to inform the House of Representatives whether the said publication contains a truthful statement of the facts in the case described, and if so to report whether such a conviction and such punishment is authorized by any law of Congress, or practice, orders, or regulations of the War Department."

Attest:

JAMES KERR, Clerk.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, July 27, 1894.

SIR: Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry, was arraigned before general court-martial at Fort Omaha, Nebr., on July 2, 1894, upon a charge of disobedience of orders in violation of the twenty-first article of war, the specification alleging that having been ordered by his superior officer, Lieut. Bookmiller, Second Infantry, at Bellevue rifle range, Bellevue, Nebr., June 17, 1894 (Sunday), to take a rifle and proceed at once with his target practice, he did refuse to obey and did disobey said order.

He pleaded in bar of trial that the order was evidently illegal, being in violation of the criminal laws of Nebraska forbidding shooting and common labor, work of necessity and charity only excepted, and also being opposed to orders and circulars from the War Department relating to the proper observance of the Sabbath. On this plea being overruled, he pleaded not guilty. He was found guilty as charged, and sentenced to confinement at hard labor for six months and forfeiture of $10 per month for the same period.

The reviewing authority approved the sentence, but mitigated it to two months' confinement at hard labor.

The evidence is substantially as follows:

Maj. Worth, Second Infantry, testifies: He was in command of the First Battalion of the Second Infantry in camp at Belleview rifle range, and directed the adjutant (Lieut. Bookmiller) to have the men who came down from Fort Omaha to shoot at target practice on Sunday, June 17, 1894, his object being to take advantage of the pleasant day and try to clear up some scores. This order was given on June 16. Cedarquist came to officers' quarters to see the adjutant, who was absent. Witness called him and asked him what he wanted, and he replied that the first sergeant had informed him that he would have to shoot some scores to-morrow, and that he did not want to shoot. Witness replied that he did not know whether he would be called upon or not, but if he received the order from the sergeant or from anyone else in authority to obey it.

Lieut. Bookmiller testifies: On June 17, 1894 (Sunday), he ordered Cedarquist, at Bellevue rifle range, to take a rifle and proceed with his target practice; that he refused to obey the order, and that Cedarquist told him before he gave him the order that he would not obey it, and after witness gave the order he again refused to obey it. Witness further says:

"He was very positive in his refusal to obey it. He talked a great deal, informing me several times before I ordered him to shoot that he would not do it."

Being asked, "Was his manner respectful?" witness says, "Out on the range it was. Before that in camp it was not."

First Sergt. Lockaberry, of Cedarquist's company, testifies that Lieut. Bookmiller ordered Cedarquist to shoot on June 17, 1894, and that he deliberately refused to obey the order. Being asked, "What was the form of the order?" Witness says: "To the best of my recollection he (Lieut. Bookmiller) asked Cedarquist to shoot. Cedarquist said, 'No, sir.' He says, 'Do you refuse to shoot?' 'Yes, sir, I do; this is Sunday.' That is about the exact words."

Being asked, "Was not the manner of accused firm, but perfectly respectful, as though he was backed by a principle he believed absolutely correct, and he could not violate it?" Witness replies: "Yes, sir, it was respectful, all right; and I believe that he was backed up by some principle."

As to the military necessity of the order, the evidence is substantially as follows:

Col. Bates, Second Infantry, in command of Fort Omaha, Nebr., says:

"There is a strong reason why it was very desirable why target practice should be completed early, as I was ordered to have four companies of the command at this post ready to move on very short notice, and it seemed probable that these companies would go out. For that reason it was desirable that the battalion at the rifle range should return to this post at an early date."

Maj. Worth, Second Infantry, being asked, "In view of the grave condition relative to the strikers was it not desirable to finish the shooting in order to take the field if called on, as it was probable?" said: "They were held in readiness to go where they were wanted; and I knew that if one battalion was called out the other would have to go too; I mean go into the field."

Cedarquist's commanding officer and the first sergeant of his company testify that his character while in the company has been very good; that he was always obedient.

The pastor of Emanuel Baptist Church, of Omaha, Nebr., testifies:

"I have known Mr. Cedarquist a year and a half. His character has been good. I have had a fairly large opportunity to know him; carefully watching young men who are members of my church, as Mr. Cedarquist is a member."

The twenty-first article of war makes it an offense to disobey any lawful command of a superior officer. The article was copied by us from the English code at the time of the Revolution, and both in England and in this country the meaning of the term "lawful command" has been often considered. It is, however, unnecessary to go into a lengthy discussion of it here.

Target practice on Sunday is not in violation of any statute of the United States. The laws of Nebraska do make it an offense to be found on Sunday "sporting, rioting, quarreling, hunting, fishing, or shooting," but it is evident that this provision does not cover an act which might be required of a soldier as a military duty; and, if it did, it would to that extent be inoperative, because the Army is part of the constitutional machinery of the Federal Government, and its legitimate operation can not be interfered with by State legislation.

As a matter of fact target practice on Sunday is not eo nomine forbidden at all, but it is covered by the order of President Lincoln, repeated by President Harrison in June, 1889, as follows:

"In November, 1862, President Lincoln quoted the words of Washington to sustain his own views, and announced in a general order that—

"'The President, Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, desires and enjoins the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and naval service. The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of the Christian people, and a due regard for the Divine will demand that Sunday labor in the Army and Navy be reduced to the measures of strict necessity.'

"The truth so concisely stated can not be too faithfully regarded, and the pressure to ignore it is far less now than in the midst of the war. To recall the kindly and considerate spirit of the orders issued by these great men in the most trying times of our history, and to promote contentment and efficiency, the President directs that Sunday morning inspection will be merely of the dress and general appearance, without arms; and the more complete inspection under arms, with all men present, as required in paragraph 950, Army Regulations, 1889, will take place on Saturday."

Under this order the propriety or impropriety of target practice on Sunday depends on its strict necessity. If it should in any case be strictly necessary it will be authorized, otherwise not. But it is evident that the soldier can not be the judge of the necessity of a military duty which he is required to perform. Were that allowed, military subordination and good order could not be maintained, and the troops would become a menace to the peace of the community in which they were stationed, instead of being a protection to it. The necessity must be determined, in the first instance, by the officer giving the command, and if he errs he is responsible for his error.

There could be no more dangerous principle in the government of the Army than that each soldier should determine for himself whether an order requiring a military duty to be performed is necessary or in accordance with orders, regulations, decision circulars, or custom, and may disobey the order if, in his judgment (taking, of course, all risks in case his judgment should be erroneous), it should not be necessary, or should be at variance with orders, regulations, decision circulars, or custom. It is his duty to obey such order first, and, if he is aggrieved thereby, to obtain redress afterwards. There are certain duties which are performed regularly on Sundays, and there may be others called forth by emergencies. It is impossible that the soldier should be made the judge of their necessity.

Very respectfully,

G. NORMAN LIEBER,
Acting Judge-Advocate-General.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR.

The letter of the Secretary of War and the telegram which was sent by the Adjutant-General under the direction of the Secretary of War are as follows:

DEAR MR. OUTHWAITE: The papers in the Cedarquist matter did not reach me until this morning.

COMMANDING GENERAL, Department Platte, Omaha, Nebr.:

The unexecuted portion of the sentence awarded Private Cedarquist, promulgated in General Court-martial Orders No. 45, current series, from your headquarters, is this day remitted by the President, and you will cause the man to be released at once. This action, however, is not in any manner to be regarded as a justification of the disobedience of orders on the part of the soldier. The officer who ordered target practice on Sunday, in violation of the order of President Lincoln, given in November, 1862, must be brought to trial for his disobedience of orders.

By order of the Secretary of War.

GEO. D. RUGGLES, Adjutant-General.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, the resolution called up by the gentleman from Ohio came to the Committee on Military Affairs of the House on the 25th day of July. It was immediately by myself, as chairman of the committee, referred to the War Department, with written request for a reply to the inquiries and statements contained in the resolution; which letter I wish to incorporate in my remarks, as well as the indorsements thereupon, and also the report from the Judge-Advocate-General's Office.

The letter is as follows:

GROSVENOR, relating to the imprisonment of a certain soldier for his refusal to do target practice on Sunday, etc., and respectfully request that your Department reply to the inquiries and statements contained in said resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs as soon as practicable. Return resolution with reply.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

[Second indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 27, 1894.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, with the accompanying synopsis of evidence and statement of the views of this Office.

G. NORMAN LIEBER,
Acting Judge-Advocate-General.

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 28, 1894.

Respectfully returned to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the statement of the Acting Judge-Advocate-General and the views of Brig. Gen. Brooke, which are concurred in.

JOSEPH B. DOE,
Acting Secretary of War.

The report from the Judge-Advocate-General's Office is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE-ADVOCATE-GENERAL,
Washington, July 27, 1894.

SIR: Private Charles O. Cedarquist, Company A, Second Infantry, was arraigned before a general court-martial at Fort Omaha, Nebr., on July 2, 1894, upon a charge of disobedience of orders in violation of the twenty-first article of war, the specification alleging that having been ordered by his superior officer, Lieut. Bookmiller, Second Infantry, at Bellevue rifle range, Bellevue, Nebr., June 17, 1894 (Sunday), to take a rifle and proceed at once with his target practice, he did refuse to obey and did disobey said order.

He pleaded in bar of trial that the order was evidently illegal, being in violation of the criminal laws of Nebraska forbidding shooting and common labor, work of necessity and charity only excepted, and also being opposed to orders and circulars from the War Department relating to the proper observance of the Sabbath. On this plea being overruled he pleaded "Not guilty." He was found guilty as charged, and was sentenced to confinement at hard labor for six months, and forfeiture of $10 per month for the same period.

The reviewing authority approved the sentence, but mitigated it to two months' confinement at hard labor.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill. I also ask, a matter of convenience, that the statement of the House conferees may be read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

(For report of committee of conference and statement of House conferees see House proceedings of July 31.)

The statement of the House conferees was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the name of Mr. JOHN L. WILSON of Washington was signed to the report, and it appears to have been omitted by the printer.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is of no material import, but I signed the report.

The SPEAKER. This is a partial agreement, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had wished to occupy the attention of the House for a short time on this report, but I find that I shall not be able to do so this morning; but inasmuch as the subject will be before the House again, I will have the opportunity later on. I will at this time only make a brief statement of the effect of this report. It has already been concurred in by the Senate and a request for a further conference made on the matters of disagreement. I will state the figures as the result.

The bill as it passed the House appropriated $6,735,518.90; as it passed the Senate it appropriated $9,404,248.49, the increase of the Senate being $2,668,729.59. In the conference the House conferees have yielded to the Senate on its amendments to the amount of $153,363.10, and the Senate has yielded to the House in conference to the amount of $68,600. So that the figures stand thus: Concessions made by the House, $153,363.10; concessions made by the Senate, $68,600. Yielded by the House in excess of the amount yielded by the Senate, $84,763.10. The larger portion of the $152,363.10 yielded by the House is in the provision for furnishing Indians with supplies, agencies, transportation, and the like. No large amount for supplies, for the House had been more than liberal in that respect.

I must further state that the subjects upon which no conclusion has been reached involve $2,447,766.49. There are only a few items involved, largely the appropriation of money for lands purchased from the Nez Perce Indians of Idaho and lands purchased from the Yankton Sioux in South Dakota, and lands purchased from the Siletz Indians of Oregon.

Those are the principal items in the sum of $2,447,766.49 as to which no agreement has been reached. I ask the House to accept this report to the extent that agreements have been reached and to consent to the conference asked by the Senate on the remaining disagreements between the two Houses.

It is proposed by the Senate, in all of its amendments in relation to the purchase of Indian lands, that the United States shall pay 5 per cent per annum on the deferred payments. The House conferees insist that as the Government can borrow money at 3 per cent, and as the Government is now paying the Indians from $1.25 to $3 per acre for their lands instead of 40 or 50 cents in former years, this rate of interest is excessive. However, in any event, we must provide for these Indians; yet an admitted large obligation on the part of the Government, as to charges on the public Treasury for these tribes, in the opinion of the House conferees, would not be beneficial to tribes interested. No one can deny that the United States should deal justly and liberally with the Indian tribes, but we ought not to leave in their minds the idea that the Government must support them.

One other matter I wish to refer to is that frequently spoken of as "sectarian Indian schools," the appropriation of public money for denominational purposes. So far as I know no member of Congress favors the appropriation of public money for the benefit of any religious denomination. When Gen. Grant became President he inaugurated what he justly called a "peace policy" with the Indians. He proposed to feed them, clothe them, and educate them instead of fighting them.

This was certainly a humane policy. His policy was to leave them under the influence of the various religious orders which had before influenced or controlled the various tribes. Schools for the Indians were organized on this basis under President Grant's policy, and that order of things was continued until the administration of President Harrison began. Gen. Morgan, Commissioner of Indian Affairs under President Harrison, declined to recognize the various religious denominations which had formerly controlled the Indian schools, and made contracts directly with the superintendents of the schools, ignoring the religious organizations and missionary boards. That policy has been pursued by the present Administration.

No contract for the teaching of Indian children has been made with any denomination or with any organized board of any denomination or religious organization under this Administration, but only with the persons who had charge of the Indian schools. Where can gentlemen find any ground of complaint? So it will be readily seen that President Grant's policy controlled our legislation as to Indian schools until the beginning of President Harrison's Administration, and that the policy of that Administration as to Indian schools has continued up to this time.

The Catholic Church first entered the missionary field among the North American Indians, and of course under President Grant's policy had the larger field of missionary enterprise opened to them and greater advantages in the establishment of Indian schools. The only denomination of Christian people, so far as I am informed, that under all circumstances and conditions has refused to request or receive any recognition or aid from Government in any shape or form or to tolerate any relation between church and state is the Baptist Church. As an humble adherent to the doctrine of that church from boyhood and a devout believer in the principles on which it is founded, I protest against the charge of the public press that the House Committee on Indian Affairs is willing to appropriate public money to a sectarian use. Congress has no right or power to do that. But in view of the policy of President Grant of 1869, continued through all Administrations until now, what are we to do? If you abolish these contract schools which originated under the President Grant policy you turn from 8,000 to 10,000 Indian children out of school. Can you afford, gentlemen, to do that?

Under the circumstances the best that can be done is the adoption of the following provision suggested by the Senate:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inquire into and investigate the propriety of discontinuing contract schools, and whether, in his judgment, the same can be done without detriment to the education of the Indian children; and that he submit to Congress at the next session the result of such investigation, including an estimate of the additional cost, if any, of substituting Government schools for contract schools, together with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

The conferees on the part of the House have promptly agreed to this provision, anxious to avoid the possibility that intolerance in creeds and beliefs should interfere in any degree with the advancement of the Indian race. The best sentiment of our people demands the civilization and advancement of the condition of our Indian people without regard to their theology or belief.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire in regard to one of the agreements, as I do not understand it. I call attention to Senate amendment numbered 75, the amendment in regard to an inquiry into Indian sectarian schools. The report is: "That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows, restoring the matter proposed to be stricken out by said amendment." Now, I do not find that there is any matter proposed to be stricken out by that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The provision incorporated in the bill by the Senate in regard to an inquiry into sectarian schools was accepted by the House conferees, and is a part of the agreement. It is agreed upon just as it stands in the Senate bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Then what is the meaning of this about "restoring the matter proposed to be stricken out by the amendment?"

Mr. HOLMAN. That is evidently a slip of the pen. I had already noticed it.

Mr. PICKLER. I am very glad the House conferees agreed to that amendment of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, there was no controversy about that at all. It was a very proper provision.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print in the RECORD some remarks in connection with the subject just alluded to, Indian schools.

There was no objection.

The conference report was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House further insist upon its disagreement to certain of the amendments of the Senate and consent to a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. WILSON of Washington.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let us have the regular order, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The morning hour begins at five minutes past 2 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Naval Affairs. That committee has a bill pending, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school for children under 17 years of age at the village of Warrington, on the naval reservation on Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of that bill.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CUMMINGS, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask for a division.

The House divided, and the motion was agreed to—ayes 50, noes 14.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again read the title as above.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school for children under 17 years of age, of parents residing on the naval reservation, in the villages of Warrington and Woolsey, on Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida. That the said school shall be established and maintained in the said village of Warrington at an annual expense of not exceeding $5,000, which said sum is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] such time as he desires.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, the other day, when this bill was under consideration, I was proceeding to explain to the House the status and situation of the people who live on this naval reservation and to state the reasons why this bill, which is exceptional in its character, should be favorably considered by the House. As I then stated, this reservation is situated differently from any other in the United States, and the people on it are differently situated from the people residing on any other territory of the United States, unless it be this District of Columbia.

Ordinarily our navy-yards are surrounded by walls, and the territory within the walls is all that is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. This navy-yard, however, is on a reservation about 3 miles long and with an average width of about a mile and a half. The navy-yard proper covers only a portion of the reservation. There are walls around the yard proper, but outside the walls are two villages known as Woolsey and Warrington, in which there are from twelve to fifteen hundred people.

Now, by reason of the fact that when the United States Government established that yard and purchased the reservation, the State of Florida ceded to the United States exclusive control of the reservation and reserved to itself only the right to serve civil and criminal process there, the people residing within that territory are entirely exempt from the obligations of citizens of Florida and they partake of none of the advantages of such citizens.

The great bulk of these people came down there before the war for the purpose of assisting in building two vessels which were being constructed by the Government at the Pensacola navy-yard and which were completed about 1858—the gunboat Seminole and the sloop of war Pensacola.

These people were skilled mechanics who came there from Baltimore, New York, and other places in the North, bringing their families with them; and under the impression that shipbuilding would be continued, they settled there. When the war came on they were left in a very lamentable condition; and since the war, the navy-yard having been to a great extent dismantled, work having been suspended, they have been left without the means of livelihood.

Now, owing to the peculiar position in which they are placed, they are not allowed to avail themselves of the advantages of the public schools of the State of Florida. There are public schools in the immediate vicinity of this reservation; but in order that a child may avail himself of the benefit of such a school he must, under the laws of the State, live within the district in which the school is situated. Hence the children of persons living on this reservation can not avail themselves of these school advantages.

The result is that, poor as these people are, dependent for a livelihood entirely upon fishing or upon such occupations as they may possibly obtain in the navy-yard in its present dismantled condition, they are too poor to pay for the education of their children. Consequently the United States Government has on that reservation some three or four hundred children who are growing up in ignorance and whose parents are utterly unable to provide for their education even in the most rudimentary form.

The State of Florida has no jurisdiction whatever over this territory. The people living on it are not permitted to serve as jurors in the courts of the State or in the courts of the United States, because they are not citizens of the State. They pay no taxes to the State. They do not even own the land on which they reside, as every lot upon which houses are built is leased to them by the commandant of the navy-yard.

This officer has autocratic power over all the residents there; and within my experience I know of an instance in which one of the commandants, finding an individual who was troublesome, who subjected the watch to considerable annoyance by misbehavior, summarily put him off the reservation, separated him from his family, and forbade his return on the penalty of being imprisoned. It was only after months and months spent in an effort to obtain the interference of the Navy Department that he was permitted to return to that reservation.

Mr. HUNTER. Would not this whole difficulty be obviated by passing an act of Congress giving the State of Florida the right to extend its school districts over this reservation, so that those people might be assessed and taxed for school purposes as the citizens of Florida are?

Mr. MALLORY. The State of Florida might do that; but I do not know that it would. These people are not citizens of the State; the State can exact no obligations or duties—such as militia duty or jury duty—from any of the inhabitants of this reservation. They are as absolutely separate and distinct from the State of Florida as the people of the District of Columbia are from the State of Maryland. The State of Florida has no more jurisdiction, except for the purpose of serving process civil and criminal, over that territory than the State of Maryland has over the District of Columbia.

Mr. HULICK. Are not the persons residing on that reservation liable to the criminal statutes of the State of Florida?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir. If an offense is committed in that territory, it is tried before the United States court.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do those people down there vote?

Mr. MALLORY. No; they do not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not?

Mr. MALLORY. Because they are not citizens of the State of Florida. In order to vote they must have resided in some precinct of some county of the State; without this they can not register and can not vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How long have they lived there?

Mr. MALLORY. They have lived there, some of them, a lifetime.

In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK], I will state that when a murder was committed there some years ago the individual charged with the offense was brought to Pensacola, in the State of Florida, and tried and convicted there before the United States court. He was then taken down to the reservation in order to be executed, as he could not be executed within the territory of the State of Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason the Government does not cede to the State of Florida all that reservation except the portion included within the walls of the navy-yard?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know why. This territory outside is not a very valuable piece of property; it is not much sought after except in the immediate vicinity of the navy-yard. It is sandy, and produces very little in the way of vegetation. I think the State of Florida does not care particularly about owning it.

These people, Mr. Chairman, are in a situation which I think is anomalous. I do not know of any people in the country who are in an identical position. The situation of the people of the District of Columbia is probably more analogous to the situation of those people down there than that of any other people of the United States.

You provide here to a certain extent for the education of the children of the District of Columbia, who are in a far better situation in every way than the children of these people to whom I refer, their parents being better able to provide for their instruction than these unfortunate people, who, by the force of circumstances, have been placed in this location on this naval reservation.

I do not think that there is any precedent for it, but at the same time we are confronted with the fact that there are some three hundred children here, both black and white, who can not obtain any assistance in educational matters from the State of Florida. They are about evenly divided in color, I think, and they are growing up in utter ignorance, not citizens of the State, owing no allegiance to the State, being simply, if we can use the term, citizens of the United States without being citizens of any Territory or State.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume the time of the House in presenting this matter any longer. If there is any other gentleman who wants further light upon the subject, I will be glad to furnish it in so far as I can.

Mr. HUNTER. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. You say there are about fifteen hundred people there, and about one hundred and fifty children?

Mr. MALLORY. There are twelve to fifteen hundred people. The number of children is about three hundred.

Mr. HUNTER. Do the people make any effort on their own part to provide for the education of their own children?

Mr. MALLORY. I will say this to the gentleman: These men were skilled mechanics who went there anterior to the war, and were usually men of first-class ability. They went there, of course, expecting this navy-yard to be continued in operation. Since the war they have had but very little to do in the line of their skill. Most of them are now old men.

If the navy-yard had been carried on as it was previous to the war, the young men who grew up there would have learned their trades in the machine shops and carpenter shops in the navy-yard and would have taken the places formerly filled by their fathers. But there was no work of this kind for them to do. They have been unable to learn any trade and are too poor to go away. Those of them who were able to go off, a number of the younger men, went up to Pensacola, where they pursued their avocations, and gradually withdrew their families from the naval reservation.

But this applied to only a very limited number. About all the property they have in the world is limited to the houses which they own on this land. The houses belong to these people, who built them, but the land itself belongs to the United States. They have received a lease which is revocable at the will of the commandant of the yard.

Mr. DOLLIVER. How much land do they occupy?

Mr. MALLORY. Well, they have villages with streets; their lots are probably a half acre or more.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Is it a necessary part of the naval reservation there?

Mr. MALLORY. It is on the naval reservation.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But is it a necessary part of the naval reservation?

Mr. MALLORY. Well, I suppose it is not.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Would it not be better to cede to the State of Florida this territory, and let these people be under the jurisdiction of that State and subject to its school laws and other laws, than to retain it as it is?

Mr. MALLORY. That might be if you could get the State of Florida to consent to receive this land. But I do not know that it would. The Legislature of Florida meets biennially, and there may be a question as to whether it would be willing to accept any part of the reservation.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The State appears, however, to be perfectly willing to put the education of these children on the Government of the United States.

Mr. MALLORY. The State of Florida is not in any sense of the word responsible in this matter. These people came there and settled on United States territory. They knew it was such. The United States Government invited them to come. The State of Florida had nothing whatever to do with it. The State assumed no obligation to look after the people who went upon this property. But they are there now, their homes are there, and they, like ourselves, are human. There are a lot of children there of these men who were leading men in their avocations, and it is a matter of charity to do something for them.

Mr. DOLLIVER. What do they do for a living?

Mr. MALLORY. Well, some of them have minor places in the yard as watchmen and laborers. Some of them fish for a living, and some of them act as pilots on Pensacola Bar. This village is located but a short distance from the mouth of the bay, about 8 miles from the city of Pensacola by land and about 5 miles by water. Some few of these people obtain their living in that way. There is an army post at Fort Barrancas, on the military reservation adjoining this naval reservation, where there are a number of troops stationed, and some of these people keep stores and supply the troops with what they choose to buy. There are generally from three to five companies stationed there. Aside from this, however, these people have no means of living. They can not go out into the world for their only property consists in the houses in which they live. Some of these are fairly good houses, frame houses, but they can not sell them. They are all anxious to go away and would do so if they could dispose of their houses, but they can not manage to get rid of them.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. What proportion of this population is colored?

Mr. MALLORY. About one-half, I think.

Mr. MARSH. Where did they come from?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know; from Florida and Alabama originally, I suppose. But these children are the descendants of people who came there many years ago. There has been no immigration of late years at all.

Mr. WASHINGTON. By what right do these people occupy this reservation now? Are they tenants of the United States Government?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does the Government charge them rent?

Mr. MALLORY. No; the Government charges them no rent. They take a regular lease from the commandant of the navy-yard. That lease is revocable at will. The commandant has absolutely autocratic control over the yard. He can remove any individual from the reservation when he chooses, and as I have stated, he has done so.

Mr. WASHINGTON. They pay no rent.

Mr. MALLORY. They pay no rent.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Does the Government keep the houses in repair?

Mr. MALLORY. No, these people lease the land and own the houses on the land, but they can not move the houses away when they leave. It is impossible to do that.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The houses have been built by occupants who preceded the present ones?

Mr. MALLORY. In more prosperous days, yes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Why would it not be better to make an appropriation to enable these people to move away from so undesirable a spot?

Mr. MALLORY. It seems to me an appropriation of $6,000, one-half to be devoted to the education of the white children and one-half to the education of the black children on that reservation, is a better plan than that suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I quite agree that something ought to be done.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. What are the reasons which keep these people on the reservation, if they have no schools there, no right to vote, and no other rights.

Mr. MALLORY. They stay there simply because they are unable to get away. If a man has a house there he can not sell the house for anything. There is no immigration there and no demand for this property any more, and the people can not leave.

Mr. WASHINGTON. A man could not convey title anyway, could he?

Mr. MALLORY. He could convey title to the house.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Of occupancy only?

Mr. MALLORY. No; he can convey the title to the house. It is regarded as personalty, and can be conveyed as fully as a man can convey a horse. Such a conveyance is recognized by the commandant.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But you say a man could not move a house away.

Mr. MALLORY. It is rather difficult, I should judge, to remove a house. A man would have to move it at least eight or nine miles.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I want to get at the facts. The gentleman says the commandant could eject an occupant at any time, and that these people are there as leaseholders, subject to the caprice of the commandant.

Mr. MALLORY. Not his caprice.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Subject to his will?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, but not to his caprice. There is a discretion, which must be a sound one, and the commandant would not dare to exercise his discretion unjustly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Could not we convey to the State of Florida the part of the reservation on which these people are residing, and let the State educate them?

Mr. MALLORY. Congress could do it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I think it would be better to do that, and let Florida educate her own people.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think the State of Florida would accept the gift.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I think she ought to be willing to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Why do not you return to the Indians the lands you have taken from them? You are educating them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is there any provision in the bill for the separate education of the races?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes; it specifies that $3,000, or one-half, shall be expended for the education of the whites, and one-half for the education of the colored children.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. When these people desire to become naturalized, where do they go?

Mr. MALLORY. They do not go anywhere. If they move into the State of Florida, they are recognized as citizens of the State, after they have resided there the requisite length of time.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. As long as they remain on this reservation they are citizens of nowhere.

Mr. MALLORY. Citizens of nowhere, except the broad United States.

Mr. HULICK. I will ask the gentleman if there are no schools there now?

Mr. MALLORY. The Sisters of Charity established a school there under the auspices of the Catholic Church, but it failed for want of patronage. They could not make a living at it. That was some years ago.

Mr. HULICK. And there are no schools at all now in the villages?

Mr. MALLORY. I do not know that there are any schools there. There may be some people who are giving private lessons. I do not mean to say that everyone on this reservation is a pauper. I do not want to be so understood; but how I do wish to be understood is that the majority of the people are too poor to maintain their children while being educated. Now, it is the policy of the United States Government in the District of Columbia to assist children in obtaining an education. This community is situated far less advantageously than the District of Columbia, and it seems to me that, by a parity of reasoning, we can at least donate $6,000 a year for this purpose until it is found to be no further necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit me, I asked him if there is any provision for the education of the different races in this bill? I understood the gentleman to say "Yes; that the fund was divided, $3,000 for the education of the colored and $3,000 for the education of the white children." I find no such provision in this bill.

Mr. MALLORY. That was my impression.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio to wait a minute.

Mr. MALLORY (after looking at the bill). My impression was that it said two public schools instead of free public schools.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, as a matter of fact, there is no provision for two schools?

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. If I remember correctly, when this bill was reported in the committee, there was an amendment adopted to that effect.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The amended bill says "schools."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the committee propose that there shall be a continual appropriation each year?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does this bill fix the amount at $6,000 each year?

Mr. MALLORY. The annual expense is not to exceed $6,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say about this. I believe the committee understands the situation; that these people are absolutely devoid of the means of educating their children; that they are citizens of the United States and not citizens of any State at all; that their position is an anomalous one; and if the majority of the committee think that this is too long a step to take in this direction, why I am perfectly willing to have any reasonable amendment offered that would at least tend to carry out the purpose that is manifested in this bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If this bill is passed, and we appropriate $6,000 for keeping up schools on the Pensacola naval reservation, would it not be a virtual committal to the policy that the United States shall keep up schools on all navy-yards, as for instance, in the navy-yard in the District, the navy-yard in Brooklyn, at Mare Island, and everywhere where there is a population resident on the reservation. There is the great danger I see in the bill of my friend.

Mr. MALLORY. If the gentleman thinks it best to strike out annual it can be done.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If you make an appropriation of $6,000 now they will build the schools and then they will come back and ask for an appropriation to keep up the schools and to keep the teachers; and if you do it for one year there will be applications to do it for other years, and we will be asked to pass a bill for that purpose.

Mr. MALLORY. These people are very differently situated from the people on the other naval reservations. There is no yard situated as this one. There is no other yard that has a population to any extent outside the yard itself. Here is a population from 1,200 to 1,500 people outside the walls of the yard. One of these villages is situated on the east and one on the west.

Mr. BYNUM. Why do not they get up private schools?

Mr. MALLORY. Simply because they have not the means to do it. Why do not they get up private schools in the city of Washington? This House is appropriating every year for the maintenance of schools in the city of Washington, and the people in this community are far better off than those people in the territory to which I have referred.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. WASHINGTON. The people of the District contribute one-half of the expenses of the government of the District.

Mr. MALLORY. But the people of the District are not in a condition comparable to that of the people down there.

Mr. WASHINGTON. But the gentleman knows personally that the Government has a great deal of taxable property here; and instead of having its property assessed and taxed at so much on the hundred or so much on the thousand dollars, Congress has agreed to contribute one-half the amount necessary for the expense of the District government.

Mr. MALLORY. But the Government down there owns every foot of the ground, and is not a taxpayer.

Mr. WASHINGTON. The Government of the United States is certainly under no obligation to pay for the education of those who reside on these reservations.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think it is, there or elsewhere. I do not wish to be understood as contending that it is the duty of the Government to provide schools at these places; but I do think that under the circumstances, when you bear in mind the fact that these people are absolutely poverty-stricken, and are unable to provide schools for themselves, the Government should provide schools on this reservation.

This thing was recommended by Secretary Tracy; and the present Secretary, when he was chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, favored the bill, and every officer who has been down there, either as commandant or in a subordinate position, has been impressed with the necessity of the United States Government doing something to provide these unfortunate people with an education.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I admit that this is an exceptional case in many respects, and a peculiar one, and I am very sorry, of course, to oppose a measure which my friend advocates and which comes as near to him as this does, but I do it entirely from a sense of public duty, because I consider that this would be a very dangerous precedent for us to establish. I think it is opening a door to a kind of legislation that will give us a great deal of trouble hereafter.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] has referred to the anomalous condition of the people living on this naval reservation in his State. I want to refer to the anomalous condition of legislation in this House with regard to the education of children. We have passed an Indian appropriation bill carrying thousands upon thousands of dollars to educate Indian children.

A MEMBER. Because they are our wards. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will come to the ward question in a moment. We send United States troops out into the mountains of Arizona and other Territories to capture the children of the Apaches, Comanches, Kiowas, and other Indians whose main amusement has been the building of fires upon the bellies of American citizens.

We send those captured children to an Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., because, forsooth, gentlemen say they are the wards of the United States! The whole country is taxed to educate them. They are wards, are they? Well, what are these poor white and black children living upon this naval reservation and holding out their hands to the Government of this country, begging for education—what are they, if not wards of the United States? They are certainly not the wards of the people of Florida. They are children of nowhere.

A MEMBER. They can get away from there if they want to.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes; and so can the Indian children get away, if you will let them; but when they do get away you run after them, recapture them, and send them back to school, and you tax the poor people of my district and of other Congressional districts to pay for their education.

Now, I say that this country is great enough and broad enough to make no distinction between the children of the white man, of the black man, and the children of the red man. Above all, they can not afford to discriminate in favor of the children of the red man and against the children of the black man and of the white man. In this case they are certainly poorer than the Indian children, and they are calling aloud for an education.

Mr. HUNTER. Is not the gentleman from New York aware of the fact that the education of the Indian children is paid for out of the Indian fund, out of money that belongs to the Indians, the proceeds of their lands which we have bought, and that this Government does not expend a cent of money out of the public Treasury for that purpose?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I am not. It may be done in some cases; but who pays the expenses of running down the Indian children and capturing them and jugging them in your school at Carlisle? [Laughter.] Do the Indians? The Government does it, and you know it. These poor children on this reservation in Florida have no opportunity to get an education unless through the aid of the Government of the United States.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand that these children on this reservation are not under the jurisdiction of the State of Florida?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They are not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They have no schools?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They have no schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And they are there on a Government reservation?

Mr. CUMMINGS. They are there on a Government reservation, a legacy of the war, and they have no schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And if they are not educated by the action of the Government they will not be educated at all.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is the fact, and, Mr. Chairman, I hold that these children deserve an education, and are entitled to it just as much as the meanest papoose strung to the back of any squaw who tramps the plains of Nevada. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. By whose permission do those people reside on that reservation, and how do they make their living?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That question has been answered three times already on this floor by the gentleman from Florida. I will repeat his words if it will be any gratification to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], but the morning hour is slipping away and it seems to me to be a mighty infinitesimal way of defeating a bill to keep asking questions about it which have been already repeatedly answered.

Mr. BLAND. I am only trying to get some information about the matter.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendments recommended by the committee.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 5, strike out "school" and insert "schools."
In line 8, strike out "school" and insert "schools."
In line 10, strike out "five" and insert "six" before the word "thousand."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 24, noes 64.

Mr. SNODGRASS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 66.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this question the ayes are 2 and the noes are 66. No quorum has voted. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Tennessee does not withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I have not withdrawn it.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Chair will be compelled to order a call of the roll——

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order unless by unanimous consent, but the Chair will entertain it if there be no objection.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Chairman, as there are less than ten minutes of the morning hour remaining, I ask unanimous consent that the hour be considered as having expired and that the committee now rise.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 103) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish and cause to be maintained a free public school, for children under 17 years of age, at the village of Warrington, on the naval reservation on Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida; pending which the morning hour had expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. When the regular order was called this morning, the Chair neglected to call the committees for reports, and will do so now.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House of the Fifty-second Congress, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Mary Stewart Losseles; there having been no adverse report.

An then on motion of Mr. SAYERS (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

LOSSES BY CYCLONE AT PORT ROYAL, S. C.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 5371) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Marine Corps was read twice by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. A similar bill is on the Calendar, and I ask that the House bill be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the bill (S. 1464) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Marine Corps be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, insisted upon its disagreement to certain other of the amendments of the Senate further insisted upon by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. ALLEN, and Mr. WILSON of Washington managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

Mr. FRYE. I present a memorial of sundry cotton manufacturers of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Hatch antioption bill. The bill having been reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I move that the memorial lie on the table.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mrs. E. S. Luke, of Clarksville, Pike County, Mo., widow of John L. Luke, who served as a soldier in the Black Hawk war, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECONVEYANCE OF LANDS.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2269) providing for reconveyance by the District Commissioners of certain lands to Andrew J. Curtis and Mary E. Curtis, to report it with amendments; and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it lead to any discussion? If it does, I must object.

Mr. MARTIN. It will not take three minutes to pass the bill. In this connection I ask the Secretary to read a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, recommending the passage of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to hear the bill read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us see what it is first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask that the letter of the Commissioners of the District be read, and that will be a sufficient explanation of the whole bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, Aug. 1, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners recommend favorable action on Senate bill 2269, "providing for reconveyance by District Commissioners of certain lands to Andrew J. Curtis and Mary E. Curtis," which was referred to them at your instance for their examination and report. The topography indicates that the street in question is not located so as to be advantageously improved. It is three and one-half miles east of the Capitol, has never been improved, and only serves at present to relieve the grantor from paying taxes upon it.

Very respectfully,

JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Senator ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Chairman Senate Committee on District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERMAN. According to that statement, the conveyance was made to the Commissioners in order to avoid taxes. If that is the case, the bill ought not to pass.

Mr. MARTIN. I can not hear what the Senator from Ohio says.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the letter read again.

The Secretary again read the letter.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill is all right then. Evidently it was the conveyance of a street to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MARTIN. The land was originally granted to the District of Columbia, without any compensation whatever, for a specific purpose, and that purpose has failed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out the second section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee report as a further amendment to strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF BOILERS.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it without amendment. I had an interview with Inspector-General Dumont yesterday, and he satisfied me as to the imperative necessity of the bill and the importance of its immediate passage. It is required by reason of a change in the test of the tensile strength of iron and steel.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Maine if it is the intention that the bill shall have immediate effect when it becomes a law? If so, what will be the effect upon vessels which now have the character of boilers which the bill prohibits? It seems to me the law ought to take effect at some day in the future.

Mr. FRYE. There is no difficulty about that, from the fact that the inspector-general explains to me that the only difficulty which can arise from this is that it changes the thickness of the iron and steel for boilers, and the result will be to reduce very largely the amount of the pressure of steam the vessels may be permitted to carry. Therefore this bill becoming a law will not make any difference; it simply allows the vessels to continue the pressure which they have now.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Maine to consent to an amendment of the title, so that it will state the object of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I do not wish to do that, because it is a House bill, and that will necessitate its return.

Mr. HOAR. All manner of inconvenient and bad legislation gets through because some Senator will say, "This is a House bill; let it go through as it is, or it will have to be sent back." The amendment I propose can be acted upon in the House of Representatives in five minutes.

Mr. FRYE. I do not know about that.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the bill being passed without an amendment of the title.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator may object, and he will cause very serious trouble by his objection.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the title by inserting the words "relating to steam boilers."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not in order to amend the title, the bill not having yet been passed.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to withdraw the report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. We have adopted a rule requiring that the title of a bill shall state its object, and I object to departing from that practice.

Mr. FRYE. The object is recited in the section. The bill is perfectly safe as it stands, and there will not be the least trouble about it to anyone, except in the imagination of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator must know that the rules are just to the contrary. This is in violation of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the report has been withdrawn.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it without amendment.

ARREDONDO GRANT.

Mr. PASCO. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution offered by my colleague [Mr. CALL], to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not a good way of doing business to have reports from committees acted upon as soon as they are made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution can only be considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any absolute necessity for the immediate passage of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. PASCO. There is, or I should not ask it. I understand and appreciate the urgency of the Senator from Missouri with reference to the appropriation bill. I ask that the concurrent resolution may be now acted upon. It will not cause any long delay.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to suspend the opening of the lands in the Arredondo grant of 20,000 acres in Columbia County, Fla., to entry under the land laws of the United States until the close of the present Congress, unless there is further legislation with reference thereto before that time.

Mr. PASCO. My colleague introduced the resolution, and I have received a petition from a number of respectable citizens, among them some of the most prominent men in Columbia County, with reference to the same matter, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, where the resolution has been considered. The petition reads as follows:

We, the undersigned citizens of Columbia County, Fla., respectfully ask you to interest yourself in effecting an equitable settlement of the "Arredondo land grant" question, so as to secure to our people who have been in actual possession of lands embraced within said grant for upwards of thirty years their homes without further trouble and expense.

There were two grants of this name. This is the smaller one. It was claimed under the statutes providing for the establishment and settlement of the Spanish land grants in Florida and other States; it was confirmed after appeal to the United States Supreme Court, but the lands included in the grant were not set off to the grantees at the time in consequence of troubles in the county, the actual settlers on the land objecting to it and resisting it. It was not until 1882 that the rights of the grantees were fully recognized and protected. The grantees were then, under a decree of the United States district court for the northern district of Florida, given scrip instead of the lands, which they have since located, and the lands included in the grant then became a part of the public domain. Subsequently they were claimed by the Pensacola and Georgia Railroad Company, which was built through that section of country under the grant of 1856; but the Department has decided that the lands did not pass by the granting act, because they were not a part of the public domain when the granting act was passed.

Under these different conditions conflicting claims have arisen and are likely to arise in increased numbers, and as set forth in this petition which has been read, persons who have been living upon some of these lands for thirty years are threatened with the loss of their homes.

A part of this grant covered a portion of Lake City, and many citizens had built their homes and made improvements there. The two-sixteenths of land extending into the city have recently been entered under a decision of the Land Office by the mayor of Lake City for the benefit of the occupants, but no sufficient relief can be secured for those living outside of the city without legislation.

It has been considered best by my colleague and myself, in talking the matter over, that a bill should be deliberately prepared to cover all of these cases, and that in the mean time these entries be suspended, so that there may be no confusion of titles, as has arisen in the State of Iowa and other States in like cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to the resolution.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that the resolution may be passed, and as part of my remarks I ask to have inserted a communication from the Attorney-General, which sets forth the main facts in the case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

The communication referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, March 28, 1884.

SIR: In reply to the resolution of the Senate of the 25th ultimo, in relation to the case of the Heirs of Arredondo vs. The United States, I herewith inclose a communication received to-day from the United States attorney for Northern Florida, dated March 25, 1884, together with a previous one from his predecessor, dated May 15, 1882. As upon the perusal of the former it seemed to me that the resolution had asked for a more specific statement of the proceedings and evidence in the case to which it referred, I have this day directed that a copy of what, besides the decree, was done under the motion of 1881 shall be transmitted. When it shall have been received I will forward it to you.

Very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

OFFICE UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF FLORIDA,
Jacksonville, March 24, 1884.

SIR: In compliance with instructions contained in your communication of the 29th ultimo, I herewith report all the information within my power relative to the suit of the heirs of Arredondo against the United States, relating to lands in Columbia County, Fla.

The resolution of the Senate calling for this information, a copy of which you forwarded to me, is as follows:

"IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 25, 1884.

"Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with information as to the suit of the heirs of Arredondo against the United States, for the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Florida, relating to land in Columbia County, Fla., and of the proceedings in said cause, and the time when the same was commenced, and as to the claimants or heirs in said cause and the evidence therein, and all other material facts relating to the same, and the validity and justice of said claim.

"Attest:

"ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary."

The suit referred to was instituted and prosecuted in the district court (and not the circuit court) for the northern district of Florida.

The history of the claim and the proceedings therein, as they appear from the records, are as follows:

In May, 1829, Benjamin Chaires et al. filed their petition in the superior court of East Florida asking for the confirmation of a Spanish grant of 20,000 acres in Columbia County, made to José de la Maza Arredondo. A decree confirming the grant was made November 24, 1834, and an appeal was then taken to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court, at its January term, 1836, held that the title of Arredondo was valid to all the land contained in these surveys (referring to the Spanish survey by Burgevin), affirmed the judgment of the lower court (see 10 Peters, 308), and issued its mandate directing the lower court to take such further proceedings as in right and justice ought to be had, etc. (See copy of mandate hereto attached marked Exhibit A.) A petition for a rehearing was filed May 21, 1844, and this petition was dismissed. (See 3 Howard, 611.)

The grant was located under the decree by the surveyor-general in T. 3 and 4 S., R. 16 and 17 E.

At the date of the confirmation many persons were residing upon the lands contained in the grant, and the surveyor-general was forcibly prevented by these residents from locating the claim by a survey, and thereby segregating it from the mass of the public domain.

In 1861, the claimants, alleging that a large proportion of the lands covered by the grant (about 13,000 acres) had been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and claiming that the grant had never been located and surveyed, instituted proceedings in the United States district court for the northern district of Florida to obtain the benefit of the second section of the act of May 26, 1824, usually called the "Missouri act," extended to Florida by the act of May 23, 1828.

A hearing on this application was had in April, 1882, the United States being represented by J. B. Stickney, esq., the then district attorney, when the court being satisfied from the evidence and a report from the surveyor-general as to the facts, entered a decree granting to the claimants the benefits of the said second section of the act of May 26, 1824. (See copy of decree hereto annexed, Exhibit B.) On the rendition of the decree Mr. Stickney gave notice of an appeal, but never took any steps to prosecute the same, so far as I could ascertain.

Mr. Stickney died in November, 1882, and I was appointed district attorney in December of the same year. On taking possession of the office I found no record of the case, and it did not appear on the docket. My attention was first called to it sometime last year by Mr. Fairbanks, counsel for the claimants, who informed me that the matter would be settled by the General Land Office if the appeal was withdrawn, and that Mr. Stickney before his death had about concluded to withdraw the appeal.

It was also brought to my attention by prominent citizens of Lake City and officers of the State government, who represented that the interests of that whole community were suffering by the delay in a settlement. On making an investigation of the claim I found from the records of the court that the proceedings had been regular to the date of the last decree made by the district court, and from all the information I could obtain it appeared that the only question in the mind of my predecessor, Mr. Stickney, was whether the claimants should have land floats for the entire 20,000 acres, or whether they should have floats for only 13,000 acres (the amount disposed of), and 7,000 acres of the lands included in the survey and still undisposed of.

I found, further, that Mr. Stickney had reported the case in full to the Attorney-General, and that by your letter to him dated May 25, 1882, you informed him that whether an appeal should be taken or not was a question for him to decide, thus leaving the matter entirely to his judgment. Mr. Stickney under this license gave notice of an appeal, but proceeded no further.

After a thorough examination of the case I could find no grounds for an appeal from the decree of the district court; and being satisfied, first, that the grant was a valid one; second, that the claimants were entitled to the benefits of the second section of the act of May 26, 1824; third, that there was no error in the decree of the district court: and, lastly, that while the interests of the Government could suffer no injury, the interests of the people of Lake City, in Columbia County, and the interests of the State would be best subserved by a speedy settlement of the question, I, assuming that the same discretion given to my predecessor by your letter heretofore referred to was also given to me, concluded to withdraw the appeal, and accordingly entered into a stipulation to that effect.

I have the honor to be, yours, very respectfully,

ED. M. CHENEY,
United States Attorney.

Hon. B. H. BREWSTER,
United States Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT A.

Mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, ss:

The President of the United States of America to the honorable the judge of the superior court of the United States for the district of East Florida, greeting:

Whereas lately, in the superior court for the eastern district of Florida, before you, in a cause wherein Benjamin Chaires, Peter Mirando, and Gad Humphreys were petitioners against the United States, the decree of the said superior court was in the following words, viz: "The court doth order, adjudge, and decree that this claim is valid, and that in accordance with the laws and customs of Spain, and under and by virtue of the late treaty of amity, settlement, and limits the United States of America and the King of Spain, ratified by the United States of America 22d February, 1821, and under and by virtue of the laws of nations and of the United States, it is hereby confirmed, adjudged, and decreed unto the said claimants to the extent, for the number of acres, and at the place as in the grant for the said land to Don José de la Maza Arredondo, and as in the plat and certificate of survey of the same made by Don Andres Burgevin, and dated the 16th of September, 1819, and filed herein, is set forth, to wit: A piece of land which contains 20,000 acres of land, situated on to the margin of a creek known as Alligator Creek. Said land commences at a little above the head of said creek, and embraces an Indian town, distant about 80 miles from the post at Buena Vista and about 40 to the northwest of Paynes Town. The first line runs north 20° west 357 chains; begins at a pine marked (X), and ends at another marked (═══). The second line runs south 70° west 560 chains, and ends at a stake. The third line runs south 20° east 357 chains, and ends at a pine marked (II); and the fourth line runs north 70° east 460 chains; as by the inspection of the transcript of the record of the said superior court, which was brought into the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of an appeal, agreeably to the act of Congress in such case made and provided, fully and at large appears. And whereas, in the present term of January, in the year of our Lord 1836, the said cause came on to be heard before the said Supreme Court, on the said transcript of the record, and was argued by counsel: On consideration thereof it is decreed and ordered that the decree of the said superior court in this cause be and the same is hereby affirmed, February 6.

You, therefore, are hereby commanded that such further proceedings be had in said cause as according to right and justice and the laws of the United States ought to be had, the said appeal notwithstanding.

Witness the honorable Joseph Story, associate justice of said Supreme Court, the 2d Monday of January, in the year of our Lord 1836.

WM. THOS. CARROLL,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

EXHIBIT B.

In the district court of the United States, northern district of Florida.

BENJAMIN CHAIRES ET AL. VS. THE UNITED STATES.

This case coming on to be further heard, on the 10th day of April, 1882, before the Hon. Thomas Settle, judge of the United States district court for the northern district of Florida, and after hearing the proof and allegations of the parties and of their respective counsel, to wit, G. R. Fairbanks, esq., for claimants, and John B. Stickney, esq., on behalf of the United States, and it appearing to the court that a survey of said lands mentioned in said grant can be made so as to give the parties legally entitled thereto the benefit of the said concession;

And it further appearing to the court by the evidence herein filed as well as from the record in this cause, and from the report of the surveyor-general also herein filed, that the said grant has never been located and surveyed by the United States and that a large portion of the lands covered by said grant have been heretofore sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and the parties claiming title under said grant having applied to this court for the privileges guaranteed by the second section of the act of 26th May, 1824, entitled "An act enabling claimants to land within the limits of the State of Missouri and Territory of Arkansas to institute proceedings to try the validity of their claims," extended and applied to Florida by an act for that purpose approved 23d May, 1828, as is claimed by the claimants' counsel, and the applicability of the act of 1824 aforesaid to this case not being contested before this court:

Therefore, on motion of said claimants' counsel, it is hereby further ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the person or persons legally entitled to the said 20,000 acres, and to the benefit of said decree, are also entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the aforesaid second section of the act of Congress of 26th May, 1824; and that in virtue thereof they have the right to enter in any land office in the State of Florida, after the same shall have been offered at public sale, the like quantity of land equal to the whole area of said grant, to wit, 20,000 acres, in parcels conformable to sectional divisions and subdivisions in lieu of and in full satisfaction of said grant to the said Joseph M. Arredondo, in conformity of the provisions of the said second section of the act above referred to; and the lands heretofore sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States, which are covered by said grant, are hereby confirmed to the parties having title to said lands from the United States, and the residue of the lands covered by the said grant shall hereafter be held and taken as a part of the public lands of the United States, subject to the same disposition as any other public lands in same district.

THOMAS SETTLE, Judge.

JACKSONVILLE, April 10, 1882.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the resolution reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HEIRS OF HENRY E. SIZER.

Mr. MCLAURIN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1406) for the relief of Eliza H. Yerger and Mary Virginia Rawlins, both born Sizer, daughters and only heirs at law of Henry E. Sizer, deceased, late of Jackson, State of Mississippi, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by the following resolution; which was read and ordered to be placed on the Calendar:

Resolved, That the claim of Eliza H. Yerger and Mary Virginia Rawlins, daughters and only heirs at law of H. E. Sizer, deceased, late of Jackson, State of Mississippi, represented by Senate bill No. 1406, with all the papers relating thereto, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims to find the facts, proceeding under existing laws, whether, barring all statutes of limitation, the said claim mentioned in the said Senate bill, or any part thereof, and, if so, what part, is under the laws of the United States a valid and subsisting claim against the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2277) defining options and futures and imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and for other purposes; which was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A bill on the same subject having been reported, the bill introduced by the Senator from Minnesota will lie on the table in the absence of objection.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not that a bill imposing taxes? Let the title be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2277) defining options and futures and imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill ought to go to the Finance Committee, where all tax bills go.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator enter a motion to that effect?

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has not a similar bill been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and been reported by that committee?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not know what are the provisions of this bill, but a bill for the same purpose has been considered and reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. All such bills in the House of Representatives have been sent to the Committee on Agriculture, and there is where they properly belong. The whole question of dealing in options or gambling in grain and food products should be considered by that committee. I think the idea of the Senator from Tennessee in asking that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance is an entire mistake.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is the object of the Senate to prostitute the taxing power to a wholly illegitimate purpose in order to take jurisdiction of a subject-matter over which Congress has no jurisdiction under the Constitution, then the argument of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] is legitimate, logical, and true; but unless such be the object and purpose, if this bill be what it purports to be, a bill levying taxes, it should go to the Finance Committee, the only committee which deals with such questions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to refer the bill to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GEORGE. If the bill introduced into the Senate is to raise money by taxation, I raise the point of order that it ought to be introduced in the House of Representatives. It can not be introduced here. By the Constitution it has to originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to the second reading of the bill. Let it lie over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made to the second reading of the bill, it will lie over until to-morrow, when the Chair will determine the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2278) granting a pension to Matthew C. Read; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PEFFER introduced a bill (S. 2279) to provide means for gathering and storing rainwater in semiarid regions of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. GEORGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4609) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED ISSUE OF TREASURY NOTES.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and the same is hereby, discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2264) for the relief of the several States of the Union, and for other purposes, and that said bill be placed on the Calendar for present consideration by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let that resolution be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation.

I notice in the Washington Post of this morning, in regard to the debate of yesterday, that when the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] was under discussion, the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is made to say that in the amendment he proposed to offer to the resolution he was aiming only at Democrats, and he named a certain number of Democrats, among them my colleague [Mr. DANIEL] and myself. I desire to ask the Senator from Texas if he meant to refer to my colleague and myself in the remarks he made yesterday?

Mr. MILLS. I did not make any remarks. I simply offered an amendment. I will say to the Senator that the statement to which he refers is wholly unauthorized. I never opened my mouth to anybody on the subject, and I never dreamed of the Senator or his colleague when I offered the amendment. Knowing both of them so long as I have known them, it never entered my mind that either of them was capable of a dishonorable action; on the contrary, they are both honorable gentlemen and friends of mine, and have been ever since we have been in public life.

Mr. HUNTON. I felt assured before I appealed to the Senator from Texas that he would reply to my interrogatory as he has done.

I desire to say for my colleague and myself that we are not interested in any coal or iron mine or in any railroad which transports coal or iron.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 207) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the towboat Future City, her barges, cargoes, etc.;

An act (S. 1399) to promote the efficiency of the naval militia; and

An act (S. 2245) to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

MATERIAL AND LABOR ON PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. VEST. In view of the fact that I am necessarily called away from the Senate on public business, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 86) for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that if any one of 500 persons is authorized to bring a separate suit against a contractor in the name of the United States, there ought to be a provision like that which is made in the probate jurisdiction of the various States, that there shall be a responsible indorser upon the writ. Of course it is not intended to make the United States liable for the costs.

Mr. VEST. No; that is expressly provided for.

Mr. HOAR. There should be a responsible indorser upon the writ, who shall be liable for costs, otherwise the contractors may be harassed by countless suits, and, the suits being in the name of the United States, the plaintiffs would have no obligation for costs.

Mr. VEST. Would not the party under the United States practice be compelled to give a bond for costs?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think there is any law to that effect now. I have looked to see, but I have no knowledge of any such law.

Mr. VEST. My impression is that the Federal courts in all cases require that a bond shall be given.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to have added to the bill an additional proviso which I can dictate? I move to add:

Provided further, That the court in which such case shall be brought is authorized to require proper security for costs in case judgment shall be for the defendant.

Mr. VEST. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as an additional proviso:

Provided further, That the court in which such case shall be brought is authorized to require proper security for costs in case judgment shall be for the defendant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, in line 6, before the word "repairs," to strike out "extensive;" so as to read:

That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the United States for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work or for repairs upon any public building or public work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, after the words "United States," to insert "for his or their use and benefit;" so as to read:

And shall be authorized to bring suit in the name of the United States for his or their use and benefit against said contractor and sureties and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up and consider the bill (H. R. 4326) to subject to State taxation national-bank notes and United States Treasury notes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish the Senate to know what the bill is. The purpose of the bill is to enable the States to tax the greenbacks and United States notes. As a rule, I believe that that would be right; that money in any form should be treated like other property, and be subject to taxation. Yet it is perfectly clear that under the language of the law it would be a violation of the public faith, pledged in the acts providing for the issue of United States notes. In the acts authorizing the issue of United States notes of every form and every form of obligation there is an express exemption from all State, national, or local taxation.

I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to a clause I find in the act of 1864, one of the leading acts providing for the issue of a large amount of bonds and Treasury notes, which declares:

And all bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

So under another act, passed at the same session, providing for an increase of the amount of United States notes, it is provided:

And such notes shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

The same provision is contained in the act of 1865, as follows:

And all bonds or other obligations issued under this act shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority.

A similar provision is carried into what is called the refunding act of 1870, which provides that—

All of which said several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

That provision does not apply to United States notes, but all the other acts providing for the issue of United States notes do forbid all kinds of taxation, State, municipal, or national.

Now, whether under the present circumstances, the notes being redeemable at the pleasure of the holder since the resumption of specie payments, there is any reason for that prohibition, is a question for Congress to determine. Still, there is a prohibition contained in all these laws against the taxation of the national securities. If Congress should repeal that provision of the act as to the bonds, it would be a clear violation of the public faith, because the bonds are continuing obligations, issued under exising law, some of them running for a period of thirty or forty years. Therefore, any change of the contract, during the term of the contract, would be an express violation of the public faith.

Whether that rule would apply to a note, which is presentable at pleasure and redeemable in coin, I have some doubt. I see no reason in equity why greenbacks or United States notes, which are legal-tender money, should not be treated like all other property and taxed by municipal, by State, and by general authority. I therefore do not see any injustice in it.

All property ought to be taxed alike, and money held by a person at any time is property in the same sense that real estate or any other property is held as property. Therefore in nearly all the States there are laws levying duties on bank notes, on various forms of securities, on money——

Mr. PLATT. Money on hand.

Mr. SHERMAN. Money on hand, which includes gold and silver.

The Senator from Mississippi, when I called his attention to the language of the law, said he would strike out the word "property." I ask to have read the clause in regard to taxing notes like other property. I think it is the last clause of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other property, money or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

Mr. SHERMAN. At my suggestion the Senator from Mississippi agreed to strike out the word "property" and say that no tax shall be levied upon United States notes, except such taxes are also levied upon all other forms of money. Gold and silver money on hand is liable to taxation by the laws of the State of Ohio and by the laws of most of the States, I suppose. Whether United States notes shall be exempt any longer, after the notes are redeemable at pleasure, on demand, is a question for the Senate to decide. Clearly such a provision extended to bonds would be a violation of public faith.

I do not wish to interfere with the bill, except to have the Senate understand distinctly that this provision is in express violation of the law under which the notes were issued. Whether the circumstances are so changed as to justify the taxing of this money is for the Senate to determine.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to be understood as saying that if the amendment suggested by him, striking out the word "property" is made, he will interpose no further objection to the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I see no further objection. I merely wished to state the fact that when the notes were issued it was expressly provided that they should not be taxable by State or municipal authority. But as the notes are now, under the existing law, redeemable at pleasure, I do not see why any distinction should be made between property in United States notes and property in gold and silver coin. That is a question for the Senate to determine.

Mr. GEORGE. Understanding that the Senator from Ohio will interpose no further objection to the passage of the bill if the word "property" in line 10, section 1, is stricken out, I move that that word be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, section 1, before the word "money," strike out the word "property;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask that the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary be now acted upon.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, line 3, before the word "circulating," to strike out "all;" in line 4, before the words "United States," to strike out "all;" in the same line before the word "other" to strike out all;" in line 6, after the word "circulating," to insert "or intended to circulate," and in the same line after the word "shall," to strike out "be subject to," and insert "not be exempt from;" so as to make the section read:

That circulating notes of national banking associations and United States legal-tender notes and other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating or intended to circulate as currency shall not be exempt from taxation under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. If all the committee amendments have been acted on I should like to have the bill read as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for the reading of the bill as amended. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That circulating notes of national banking associations and United States legal-tender notes and other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating or intended to circulate as currency shall not be exempt from taxation under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not be deemed or held to change existing laws in respect of the taxation of national banking associations.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the bill come from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. HAWLEY. From what committee does it come?

Mr. GEORGE. From the Committee on the Judiciary. I will state that a similar bill was passed by a unanimous vote by the Committee on the Judiciary several years ago, when Judge Edmunds was chairman, and it was unanimously passed by the Senate after debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to move to amend the bill by adding after the word "taxation," in line 7, the words "as money on hand."

Mr. GRAY. I suppose that is all that could have been meant. If that is not meant by the original bill, I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that those words should be inserted. Could it be supposed that national-bank notes are to be taxed otherwise than as money on hand?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the explanation of the meaning of the bill, but inasmuch as the States tax money on hand, and it is the intention of the Senator from Mississippi only to provide for the taxation of United States notes when they are money on hand——

Mr. GRAY. That is to provide for their nonexemption.

Mr. CHANDLER. Like gold or silver, it seems to me the expression "money on hand" should be inserted in the proposed act.

Mr. GRAY. I think so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "taxation," in line 7, insert "as money on hand;" so as to read:

Shall not be exempt from taxation, as money on hand, under the laws of any State or Territory.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not object to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. TURPIE. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to insert after the words "as money on hand," the words "or on deposit."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the amendment, the words "or on deposit."

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. CHANDLER). Accept it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I accept the amendment, and I understood the Senator from Mississippi to accept my amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not object to it, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to move an amendment. I move to insert "gold and silver, or other coin," so that the provision will apply equally to Treasury notes and gold and silver coin of the United States. I do not suppose such an amendment is necessary, but——

Mr. GEORGE. Not at all, because the word "money" is used, which embraces gold and silver. I will read the provision:

Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money—

Mr. HOAR. That is another point.

Mr. GEORGE—

or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

Mr. HOAR. I understand; but it is not there that I propose my amendment. I propose my amendment in the authority to tax. I do not want to have it appear that there is any distinction. Of course every Senator is familiar with the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, and if we pass a law authorizing the taxation of United States notes as money, that is the only statute on the subject. It might be claimed that a man with a thousand or a million dollars' worth of gold coin or silver coin in a vault would get off. So I want to have inserted after the word "currency" the words "all gold, silver, or other coin," putting all money on the same footing. I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TURPIE. I submit that there is no utility in the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. The only reason why we are passing any act at all on the subject is because the particular paper credit—that is, Treasury notes and others—mentioned in the proposed act are exempt by law from taxation by and under State authority. Gold and silver coin of the United States has never been so exempt. Consequently it need not now be included in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I entirely agree with the Senator from Indiana. He is quite right. The amendment is not necessary, but it can do no possible harm, and I think it will avoid any misunderstanding; that is all. I should like to have the amendment made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add after the word "currency," in line 6:

And all gold, silver, or other coin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TURPIE. I hope the amendment will not be inserted in the bill. The only effect it will have will be to cast serious doubt upon the construction of the language now used. I am not mistaken as to what that is. Doubts originate soon enough and readily enough without being assisted by suggestion here. But there is no necessity for the amendment. That is admitted. The Senator from Massachusetts admits it. I think it is better that words not necessary should form no part of the enactment.

Mr. PALMER. This bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary, and so far as I can understand it I may say that I favor the bill. Whatever language may be adopted in regard to determining the taxability of these notes satisfies me. However, I am impressed by one fact, and that is the reason why I make the inquiry I rose to make. Why is it that in the past history of the country no such law has before been enacted by Congress?

That leads me to ask the further question, Has not this subject some financial aspects? May it not in some way affect the use, the acceptability of Treasury notes and other paper issued by the Government for the purpose of circulation? Will it, in other words, affect the Treasury in the slightest degree? I am not on terms with the Treasury; I am not supposed to feel any interest in the Treasury, and hence what I say will not be likely to startle or frighten anybody. Still I recognize the fact that the Treasury just now is in a situation at least which requires attention.

Will this affect the Treasury in any manner whatever? Will it be likely to lead to the presentation at the Treasury of this class of paper? In consequence of making this class of paper subject to taxation will the Treasury be likely to be called upon for its redemption? Will this amendment affect that question in any way? I am led to doubt on that point from the fact that more than thirty years have passed since the Government commenced to issue redeemable paper, and yet that paper has never been subjected to taxation.

Now, is there any danger that this may disturb the operations of the Treasury or affect the use and acceptability of any paper described in this bill? If there is no such danger, I am then led to inquire why thirty years have elapsed and more during which such a bill has never been passed. I repeat, I will vote for the bill; but I desire to say that I am not quite sure of the wisdom of legislating in respect to paper which depends for its value upon the ability of the Treasury to redeem it upon presentation.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine will state his point of order.

Mr. HALE. Has the deficiency appropriation bill been taken up by the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has.

Mr. HALE. Then I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has been considering the present bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from Maine will not interpose. We are very nearly through with the bill. It is a very important measure. I have the consent of the chairman of the committee for its consideration.

Mr. HALE. The bill will open the whole volume of discussion on the great question of finance. I have no doubt that the Senator from Nevada, who is on the floor at the present moment seeking recognition of the Chair, has an amendment involving the free coinage of silver.

Mr. STEWART. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not present such an amendment.

Mr. HALE. I guessed right.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator was correct.

Mr. HALE. Therefore, when the Senator from Mississippi, with that in view, says that this bill can be disposed of in ten or fifteen minutes, or ten or fifteen hours, or ten or fifteen days, he is stating an absurdity; and I insist that the Senate shall go on with the regular order, which is the deficiency appropriation bill. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not be led into yielding for the consideration of such little bills that involve free silver and everything else.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Maine yield until my amendment can be offered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not introduce that amendment. It will not amount to anything. Let us get through with the bill.

Mr. STEWART. It is in order, is it not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks that his amendment may be read for information.

Mr. HALE. Let it be printed.

Mr. STEWART. It consists of only two short sections.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

Mr. HALE. Read it, then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. 3. That the silver coins of the United States shall be composed of standard silver. That of the silver coins the dollar shall be of the weight of 412½ grains; the half-dollar of the weight of 206¼ grains; the quarter-dollar of the weight of 103¼ grains; and the dime, or tenth part of a dollar, of the weight of 41½ grains. And that dollars, half-dollars, quarter-dollars, and dimes shall be legal tenders of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sum whatever.

SEC. 4. That silver bullion brought to any mint of the United States for coinage shall be received and coined by the proper officers for the benefit of the depositor: Provided, That it shall be lawful to refuse, at the mint, any deposit of less value than $100 and any bullion so base as to be unsuitable for the operations of the mint.

Mr. STEWART. I will state that that is the act of 1837.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not object when the Senator from Mississippi asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, because I was assured, and he doubtless fully believed it, that the bill would be passed inside of twenty minutes.

Mr. GEORGE. It could have been passed in one minute.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was upon that assurance that I did not make an objection, but I am compelled now to ask for the consideration of the regular order, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. TURPIE. I move to take up the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TURPIE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PEFFER. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana to proceed with the consideration of the bill which has been before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a motion to displace the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the bill can be passed in five minutes.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not understand that it displaces the appropriation bill. It is not yet 2 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. The appropriation bill was taken up by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It has already been taken up.

Mr. COCKRELL. The appropriation bill is pending before the Senate, having been taken up on my motion. As a matter of course, if the motion of the Senator from Indiana prevails it displaces the appropriation bill. That is all there is about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5575) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAYERS, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, and Mr. COGSWELL, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2650) providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, Mr. MCKAIG, and Mr. BRODERICK, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The deficiency appropriation bill will be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope there will be no further requests for the consideration of bills. We will finish this bill in a very short time. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have been upon the floor for sometime desiring to ask for the consideration of the resolution that I submitted, and which was under consideration yesterday, proposing an investigation of the Dominion Coal Company. In view of the admonitions of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Missouri, I shall not make that request now, but I give notice that after the deficiency appropriation bill is disposed of I shall press the consideration of that resolution. I now ask that the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] offered to the resolution may be perfected and printed, if I can have the attention of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COCKRELL. That can be done when the resolution is called up.

For packing boxes, $55.44.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to have an explanation from the Senator in charge of the bill as to the amendment which has just been read in relation to packing boxes. What are they for?

Mr. COCKRELL. Senators are allowed one or two boxes a year to be used by them in sending away bulbs and plants from the Botanical Gardens, or for other such purposes.

Mr. PEFFER. Then, Mr. President, I move to strike the amendment out.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the item referred to is an amendment reported by the committee, and the object of the Senator can be attained by voting down the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is to pay for a deficiency in the appropriation for packing boxes, which have already been furnished, and the Senator has had his share of them.

Mr. PEFFER. I was mistaken as to the rule of order, but I think I recognize that the furnishing of packing boxes for Senators is not a proper item of charge against the people of the United States. If I understand it correctly, they are mere private conveniences for the personal comfort of Senators, not provided for in the law, except specially from year to year in appropriation bills; and I think such an item ought not to be incorporated in an appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator want to cut off the packing boxes, or does he want to deprive the persons who furnished the material of their pay for what Senators have already had? This appropriation is for the past year, and the expense has already been incurred.

Mr. PEFFER. It does not matter. Senators are able to pay for their packing boxes, and I think it is an improper item either for the past or for the future.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not understand what the Senator said, but it is a strange way of reforming to begin to repudiate an honest debt, simply because the debt ought not to have been contracted in advance. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 64, after line 11, to insert:

To pay to Florence S. Vance, widow of the Hon. Zebulon B. Vance, deceased, late a Senator from the State of North Carolina, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to be allowed to go back to page 52, as I was necessarily called from the Chamber for a few moments, in order that I may offer an amendment. It is to perfect a committee amendment which was inserted in the legislative, etc., appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

So as to make the clause read:

Bryan, treasurer, etc., $800,386.31; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is directed to withhold from distribution among said Indians only so much of that part of the said judgment set apart by the said Indians for the prosecution of their claim as is necessary for him to discharge the expenses justly payable on account of said prosecution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Some of the names in the list of these judgments of the Court of Claims have been misprinted. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified as indicated, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 147, line 12, before the words "in all," to insert:

To Southern Pacific Company, $1,809,539.70.

And in line 15, before the word "cents," to strike out "one million thirty-eight thousand six hundred and ninety-eight dollars and twelve" and insert "three million eighty-three thousand seven hundred and eighty-five dollars and eighty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

To Southern Pacific Company, $1,809,539.70; in all, $3,083,785.85. Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question in reference to this item. For the information of the Senate I ask on what account the appropriation is proposed to be made?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is to pay a judgment of the Court of Claims rendered in favor of the Southern Pacific Company, and it does not include anything that is in controversy between the Government and the company.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator whether all judgments of the Court of Claims which have become final are included in the bill? Is it the design of the Senate Committee on Appropriations to pay all judgments against the United States rendered by the Court of Claims?

Mr. COCKRELL. All final judgments except those in relation to the bonded railroads.

Mr. WHITE. I have personally had some doubt as to whether this appropriation ought to be made, because of the unsettled condition of the Government's claims, not only against the railroads, but against the persons who own the stock in those roads. The matter being unadjusted, the question arises whether it would not be better to permit the matter to remain unsettled until the Government claims can be fully adjusted as between all those parties and the Government. I suppose, however, that the committee have investigated the matter very fully.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 148, line 1, after the word "forty-two" to insert "and Senate Executive Document No. 149," and in line 5, before the word "cents," to strike out "forty-seven thousand one hundred and thirty dollars and fifty-two" and insert "forty-nine thousand and sixty dollars and eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

JUDGMENTS, UNITED STATES COURTS.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer an amendment. On page 28, after line 17, I move to insert:

Pay for rent of rifle range: For rent of rifle range at Bellevue, near Omaha, Nebr., to Henry T. Clarke, rent being from July 1, 1891, to July 1, 1894, $1,800, to be received in full of all claims for said rifle range to the last-named date.

This rifle range is at the little town of Bellevue, 3 or 4 miles from the city of Omaha. It was rented by the Quartermaster's Department in 1886 and has been used continuously for the competitive shooting of the Department of the Platte from that time to this. I have myself visited it frequently, and I have personal knowledge of the fact that every year the troops go into encampment there during most of the summer and use this range. They have improved it in the way of putting up rifle butts to stop the balls and so on. The rent was paid up to the 1st of July, 1891. Since that time it has not been paid.

There was a little question of disputed ownership, some parties claiming that as the ground had been laid out in town lots at one time they were entitled to pay for the streets and alleys which had been dedicated to public use. That was probably the occasion of the difficulty. Since July 1, 1891, the rent has not been paid. The amount agreed upon by the Government was $600 a year for the use of this large tract of land. I have here a communication from the chief quartermaster of the Department of the Platte to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, as follows:

All papers returned with statements of Mr. H. T. Clarke, and maps showing the lands used as a rifle range and described in indorsement of inspector of small arms practice, Department of the Platte. The lands in question were leased from H. T. Clarke in 1886, and have been occupied and used continuously by the United States from that date up to the present time, and rent was paid to him up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and no other parties have made any claim for rent, or the use of the land, until this made by Messrs. Nolan and Martin, as citizens of the village of Bellevue—they representing that the village of Bellevue owned about 42 acres of the land in question, and were entitled to one-third of the amount appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1893.

This claim is understood to be based upon the streets and alleys laid out in the plat of the village; but that they are not used as such is evident from the fact that the ground has been used as a rifle range for several months in each year since the land was first leased by the Department. The question also arises whether under any circumstances the village authorities would have a legal right to claim or accept rent for the use of streets and alleys that have been dedicated to the public. When the land was first leased from Mr. Clarke, he went to considerable expense in clearing and leveling the ground, cutting out underbrush, sinking wells, etc., in order to make the place suitable for the purposes required, and rent has been paid to him only, and to no one else, by the United States, for the use of the land, the last payment being for rent to July 30, 1891, at the rate of $600 per annum.

Attention is respectfully invited to the third paragraph of Mr. Clarke's letter of May 23, 1894.

I have personal knowledge of this matter and know that it is a just claim for the amount named. I hope there will be no opposition to the insertion of the item in the appropriation bill. I have telephoned to the War Department, and I will obtain and hand to the committee before the bill goes into conference the report of the Quartermaster-General himself ratifying this letter of the chief quartermaster of the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6518) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1896) to provide for the payment of 8 per cent greenback certificates of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 829) granting an honorable discharge to Cyrus Payne, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

APPROPRIATION FOR PROVIDENCE HOSPITAL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Sisters of Charity who have charge of the Providence Hospital feel very much hurt at a remark made by a Senator upon the floor yesterday, which I will read. I have been hoping he would come in. They wish me to make a correction. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] said:

The appropriation for the Providence Hospital specifies that they shall have 95 patients, for which they shall receive $19,000, or $200 per patient. That strikes me as being a very remarkable provision. I do not know how long patients are sick in hospitals in the city of Washington, but it seems to me they do not average an expense of $200 each, yet this lump amount is given to this hospital, and there are to be 95 patients, and no more, and the hospital is to get this compensation for that purpose.

This statement conveys the idea that these sisters only take care of ninety-five patients in the course of a year. Instead of that they take care of several hundred patients in the course of a year. Under the arrangement made with the Government, a contract which has been of long standing, they get about $200 for a bed. They have ninety-five beds always occupied by persons designated by the District Commissioners and other authorities of the city. So instead of ninety-five patients they have several hundred patients in the course of the year. A patient may go there and stay a day or two, but there are always ninety-five places reserved—reserved for patients who are under the care of these sisters. They get $200 a year, and the authorities here are to take care to keep the beds occupied during the whole year. Therefore the beds are constantly filled. The impression that they get only ninety-five patients is a great mistake, and they feel that great injustice has been done them by this statement.

I take pleasure in saying that my attention was very early called to this hospital. Thaddeus Stevens took the greatest personal interest in Providence Hospital before the war, and during the war my attention was called to it very often, and I have watched its work. I have been there several times to see persons who have been there lying sick in bed. I know it is the case that instead of entertaining ninety-five patients they entertain five or six hundred. A patient may go there overnight sick and he may stay only a day or two. His bed is vacant when he recovers and is in fit condition to go out, and some one else fills the place.

The sisters are paid only $200 a year for the bed and for the care and sustenance and nurture of those who may occupy the 95 beds, and they are almost constantly occupied.

I look upon Providence Hospital and Garfield Hospital as two of the most valuable charitable institutions of this city, and I take great pleasure in making this correction of the error the Senator from New Hampshire fell into. I make the correction for the benefit of the sisters there and at their request.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7477) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUNTON. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 163, at the end of line 12, I move to insert as a separate paragraph:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Silas Q. Howe, surviving partner of W. T. Pate & Co., the sum of $19,662.19, being the sum audited under section 3220, Revised Statutes, and set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 46, Fiftieth Congress, second session, being the sum paid by said firm as taxes on distilled spirits in excess of the quantity withdrawn by said firm from bonded warehouse.

Mr. COCKRELL. That amendment can not come at that place, if at all. That is where the claims allowed by the First Comptroller are provided for. There is a specific class of claims stated there. It would disarrange the whole bill.

Mr. HUNTON. Then I ask that my amendment may come in on page 9, at the end of line 23.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this claim is an old stager. It has been before the Senate for nearly twenty years, I think.

Mr. HUNTON. Oh, no.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have been here nearly twenty years and it was one of the first claims presented to the Committee on Claims after I came here. I am speaking by the record. I can give the Senator the history of the claim.

Mr. HALE. It is older than any of us.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is even older than the Senator's service in the Senate and in the House. It has been before the Finance Committee, and it has been before the Committee on Claims. It is an old matter. At the urgent solicitation of the friends of these gentlemen, or those who represent them, the claim was put on the deficiency appropriation bill once or twice, but it has always been rejected by the other House. It is a claim pure and simple. It arises upon a distillery that was seized by a revenue collector years and years ago. I should like to see the document the Senator refers to about its being audited. Has the Senator that document?

Mr. HUNTON. No; I have it not here. This was in the bill before.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been put in the deficiency appropriation bill once or twice; but unless it can be shown that it is an audited claim, it is just the kind of claims pending before all of the committees here, which have been pending for years and years. That is my recollection of the matter. Unless there is an estimate for it and a report from the Treasury Department, I make the point of order that it is a claim, and that under clause 4, Rule XVI, it is not in order.

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I suppose the first question to be decided is the point of order. I beg leave to say in regard to that, that while there has been no estimate made for the claim in the Book of Estimates for this session of Congress, it was estimated for in the last Congress. Whether that will bring the case within the point of order or not I am not parliamentarian enough to determine. But there is another matter which meets the point of order, and which my friend, I think, will agree meets it when I shall mention it to him. I beg the Senator's attention to what I am about to say. The rule, as I understand it, does not make this amendment amenable to the point of order. The rule is in the following language:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

The rule does not make an amendment amenable to a point of order where it is a treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session. I hold in my hand a bill passed for the relief of this very party at the present session of Congress. It was passed by the Senate May 19, 1894. So if there was no other mode of meeting the point of order that would be quite sufficient, and my friend, I suppose, will admit it.

Mr. COCKRELL. No, Mr. President, I can not admit that under such a construction of the rule it has ever been held by this body that because the Committee on Claims considered a bill and passed it, therefore it was in order to offer it as an amendment to an appropriation bill. It has never been so held. We have now, I suppose——

Mr. HUNTON. If the Senator will allow me, he misunderstood me. I did not say the Committee on Claims had reported it, but I said——

Mr. COCKRELL. Did not the Committee on Claims report it?

Mr. HUNTON. The Committee on Claims reported it, and the Senate passed it.

Mr. COCKRELL. So I am saying. I say it has never been held, when the Committee on Claims or any other committee of the Senate considering a claim has reported in favor of it and the Senate has passed it and sent it to the House and no action has been taken, that such claims were in order. I have constituents, a dozen of them, whose bills have been passed year by year, and upon this identical bill I refused to put a claim that was insisted upon by the attorney. The bill has passed the Senate three different times and the money is lying in the Treasury, and it is only a question as to the identity of the individual to enable him to draw it.

As I said, this is a claim pure and simple, notwithstanding the Committee on Claims has reported in favor of it and the bill has passed the Senate. The Committee on Public Lands reports claims to refund moneys to officers and matters of that kind, and they pass here. We do not put them on this bill. If you establish that precedent you simply compel the Committee on Appropriations to do all the business of all the committees of the Senate. Senators are complaining that the Committee on Appropriations absorbs jurisdiction. On the contrary, we have done all that we possibly could to prevent the assumption of anything that did not legitimately come before us. We read this rule:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

We adhere to that rule that you made for our guidance. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia is a private claim. It makes no difference what construction the Senator may put upon the first clause of the rule, here is a sweeping clause at the end of it which says that:

No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. It is not often, sir, that I would dare to undertake to enlighten the Senator from Missouri upon a point of order. He has stated with a great deal of confidence that the ruling of the Chair was never had sustaining an amendment of this sort, because it was embodied in an act which had passed the Senate. That is the position taken by the Senator from Missouri. I ask what is the meaning of the word "act" in the rule? It does not mean a law. It says an act that has passed the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. HUNTON. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. HALE. I was going to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HUNTON. I will hear the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. HALE. We have had this up a good many times, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has ruled upon it as President pro tempore, as also the former Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, I remember. Their interpretation was that that is not an act or resolution passed by the Senate, but it is to conform to some existing law or treaty stipulation or act, which is a completed act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session. The Senate can, by a resolution upon a distinctive matter, make it in order. It may take a subject-matter and declare that it shall be in order upon an appropriation bill. But I have never known it held—if it has been done it was exceptional—that the word "act" there simply refers to a bill reported by a committee and passed through this body, which does not make it an act.

Mr. HUNTON. I should like to know from the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Missouri what the word "act" in the phrase "act passed by the Senate" means. It does not mean a law passed by both Houses of Congress. It says, "an act, or resolution passed by the Senate at that session."

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not get the point. It does not say "act, or resolution passed by the Senate," because if it did there would be no comma there. It makes distinctions. It says, "or treaty stipulation, or act," then a comma, "or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session." It is not an act that is passed by the Senate.

Mr. HUNTON. I have it here and it reads, "or act, or resolution."

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator notice that there is a comma there? If says "or act," then it reads "or resolution previously passed by the Senate." Both Houses have the right to make provisions in order.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the Senator to let me conclude my remarks.

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I do not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HUNTON. I am sure the Senator does not.

Mr. HALE. But he loses the point.

Mr. HUNTON. If it is an act passed by the Senate, then it is a bill which has proceeded that far to become a law and has not become a complete law because the other House has not acted upon it and the President has not signed it, but it is an act or resolution which has passed the Senate at this session. I maintain, and I maintain with a great deal of confidence, that wherever that is the case, if it has passed the Senate at this session in the shape of a bill or resolution, although it may not have reached the other House or the President, it is in order to offer it as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

The Senator from Maine and the Senator from Missouri have stated with a great deal of confidence that there has never been such a ruling as this; that, on the contrary, all the rulings have been the other way. I am not familiar with the precedents of the Senate, but I have before me a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which contains a case identically in point, in which the Presiding Officer ruled that an act passed by the Senate was within the meaning of the exception of the rule in regard to offering amendments to appropriation bills. I can not read it all. The Presiding Officer—I think the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was in the chair at the time—said:

The Senator need not, so far as the enlightenment of the Chair is concerned, argue as to what the word "act" in the rule means.

Mr. PASCO. I was arguing for the benefit of the Senator from Maine.

For the Senator from Maine seems to have made this same point at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds the word "act" in that rule means a bill passed either House, even though it has not passed the two Houses and become a law.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia a question, if he will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HUNTON. I would prefer to finish, but if the Senator insists upon it I will yield.

Mr. HOAR. No, I do not insist if the Senator prefers to go on; but I wanted simply to ask him about this language.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, sir; go on.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senate passed a number of claims at the first session of a Congress, does anybody suppose that it would not be in order to put them on an appropriation bill and at the same time it would be in order to put on an appropriation bill claims passed at the second session?

Mr. HUNTON. I am not called upon to decide that question.

Mr. HOAR. In other words, what force, according to the Senator's argument, is there in the limitation of the rule to resolutions passed during that session?

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to show the Senator that this bill has been passed at this very session. It was passed on the 14th of July, 1894, so that it is an act passed by the Senate at this identical session. But I was going on to show the ruling of the Chair (the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] in the chair) upon this identical question when the point of order was raised on an amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator need not, so far as the enlightenment of the Chair is concerned, argue as to what the word "act" in the rule means.

Mr. PASCO. I was arguing for the benefit of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds the word "act" in that rule means a bill passed by either House, even though it has not passed the two Houses and become a law.

Now, there is a ruling of the Chair in which he expressly maintained and expressly decided that where a bill had passed the Senate during the present session making a provision for the payment of a claim, it was in order under that rule to offer an amendment to an appropriation bill to pay the claim. The debate went on further between the Chair and several members of the Senate, when the Chair overruled the point of order and stated that the amendment was not amenable to that point of order, and it was finally passed upon by a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Virginia when that ruling of the Chair was made?

Mr. HUNTON. I hold in my hand a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD bearing date March 4, 1893, and it is a report of the proceedings of the previous day; so that I have here the last decision on the subject. There is no pretense that there has been any decision since. It is the last decision made upon this subject, in which the occupant of the chair, one of the best parliamentarians connected with the Senate, ruled that such an amendment was not subject to this point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair further inquire of the Senator from Virginia what was the nature of the amendment offered upon which that ruling was made?

Mr. HUNTON. I will read it.

On page 22, line 17, I move to insert—

Says the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to settle the account stated between the United States and the State of Florida, under the authority of section 55 of the act approved March 2, 1889, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for prior years, and for other purposes;" and in making such settlement he is hereby authorized to set off what is found to be due by the State to the day of settlement on account of principal and interest upon the bonds of the State, in which a portion of the Indian trust funds have been invested, against what is found to be due the State to the same date for moneys expended by her during the Indian hostilities of 1849, and 1856, and 1857, and to surrender such bonds and the coupons thereto to the governor of said State upon making such settlement. And in making the settlement the Secretary is directed to follow the statement of the account as made under the authority of said act, as found in the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated December 16, 1889, published as Executive Document No. 68, House of Representatives, Fifty-first Congress, and to adopt the first mode of settlement," etc.

There was a claim of the State of Florida, which was put upon an appropriation bill. I say that that case and the present are identical. It is the same case in principle as the one now before the Senate, and it was ruled to be in order, because the Senate at that session had passed a bill, which had not gone through the other House, making provision for the payment of this identical claim. That amendment was decided by one of the best parliamentarians on the floor of the Senate to be in order. If that was in order, and it was decided to be and a final vote taken upon the merits of the case, why is not the amendment I propose in order, because it is to pay a claim that the Senate at this very session has passed a bill appropriating a sum of money to pay?

The Senate has passed this claim not only at this session, but on four different occasions. The accounting officers of the Treasury refuse to pay it, not because they do not believe it is a just claim, not because they would not pay it if it was a new question, but they decline to take it up and pass upon it, because a predecessor of the present Secretary of the Treasury, and his predecessor, had without consideration decided against the claim, and they claim that they can not upturn the decisions of their predecessors. The present Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary under the last Administration would have taken up this case and paid this claim if it had not been for the fact that a preceding Secretary of the Treasury, before the law was settled, had decided that he had no right to refund this money.

This case is of this nature. This firm were distillers. They put into a warehouse a large quantity of whisky, and by evaporation and leakage a large amount of it was wasted. When that whisky was withdrawn from bonded warehouse, the Government required this firm to pay a tax not only upon what they withdrew from the warehouse, but also upon what they put into the warehouse, part of which was wasted by evaporation and leakage. When the Secretary of the Treasury first took up this question he decided under the law that he had no right to refund that money which the firm was obliged to pay in order to get the whisky out of the warehouse.

Subsequently, however, other cases coming before the Secretary of the Treasury, the question was elaborately argued and carefully considered, and the Treasury Department came to the opinion under the law that a party was not bound to pay taxes except for the whisky which was withdrawn from the bonded warehouse. Under that ruling of the Treasury Department thousands and thousands of dollars were refunded to distillers, and only three cases were left which have not been settled in that way. Those three cases were not settled because they were the first decided, and decided adversely to the applicants; and the Treasury Department said that they had no right to reopen their decision.

Mr. President, this is somewhat upon the merits of the case, but upon the point of order which is now pending before the Chair, I submit that when I show to the Chair that a bill to pay this very claim was passed at this session of Congress, under the ruling of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], when formerly in the chair, it is in order for me to offer the amendment to this appropriation bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I spoke of this claim being an old stager. It is just thirty years old. It originated in August, 1864. The firm of W. T. Pate & Co. deposited a quantity of whisky in their own barrels in a Government warehouse in August, 1864; they took it out in December, 1864, and a controversy arose between them and the Internal Revenue Department in regard to the amount of whisky which was in the warehouse. They claimed that there had been evaporation, and so on.

We all know that the law only allows a certain amount for evaporation. If there was any leakage, it is not the fault of the Government officers, because the whisky was placed in the barrels which the distillers themselves had provided, and the officers of the Government had ample power to adjust the claim. Under section 3220 of the Revised Statutes—

The Commissioner of Interal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized, on appeal to him made, to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected.

This firm had ample remedy. The officers of the Government refused to pay them, and the matter has been pending in Congress ever since. Since it came into Congress—I do not know when it was first presented to Congress—it has been before the Committee on Claims, it has been before the Committee on Finance. It is a claim pure and simple, and comes within the meaning of the fourth clause of Rule XVI, which provides:

4. No amendment, the object of which is to provide for a private claim, shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provision of an existing law—

Not the provisions of a bill passed by the Senate at this session, or any other—

Or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what is the use of introducing an amendment to an appropriation bill to put upon that appropriation bill a claim already provided for by existing law? If a bill has passed both Houses and has been signed by the President, it becomes a law, and the first clause of the rule says "or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

I ask the Chair for a ruling on the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the judgment of the Chair, the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri is well taken. It seems that in the case to which the Senator from Virginia made reference, the exact point was not raised. It seems quite manifest, from a reading of the clauses which have been referred to by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Virginia, that clause 4 of Rule XVI was intended to be a limitation to apply exclusively to private claims, and to that extent an absolute limitation upon the power mentioned in clause No. 1. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KYLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Redfern and Eliza J. Redfern, of the District of Columbia, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,738.40, being the sum stated to be due by the War Department for injuries to and rent of buildings numbered 1719 and 1721 G street northwest, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. KYLE. I present this claim because it is a just one. There is no question in regard to its justness. The War Department hired the buildings 1719 and 1721 G street, in Washington, D. C., for Signal Service purposes. It occupied those buildings and was held to the rent according to law. There is no question upon the part of the War Department as to the justness of the claim. They have certified to the correctness of the statement made in the report by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]; they certified the claim to the Treasury Department for payment, but the report came back from the Treasury Department that there was no money available under the appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government out of which this claim could be paid, and therefore it was recommended to Congress that it be paid by special appropriation.

There is no way in which it can be paid, according to the decision of the Treasury Department, except by a special appropriation by Congress. A bill was introduced here during the present session and passed by the Senate, upon the recommendation of the Committee on Claims; it went to the House of Representatives, has been favorably reported by the committee there, and is now upon the Calendar in that body. Therefore I think the claim is in order on this bill. It is a new claim, but one of the kind which has been pending since 1889, and these parties are still waiting for their money. I think there can be no objection to putting the claim on this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is exceedingly painful for me to be compelled to make the point of order in defense of the Committee on Appropriations in the course it has pursued, to be impartial and just in these matters. The greater part of this claim ought to be paid; the Senator is correct in that; but the parties say it is a claim, and they had a bill introduced to pay their claim. It was referred to the Committee on Claims, the only committee which has jurisdiction of claims. It has been reported favorably, has passed the Senate, and is pending in the House of Representatives. I hope the bill will pass that body, for I have had occasion to examine into the facts of the case.

The Treasury Department deny that they have any authority to pay it—and therefore they did not audit it—because a part of the claim was for damages to the house which was occupied, and they claim they have no jurisdiction over such matters.

Mr. KYLE. The claim is for repairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. And for damages also. The accounting officers of the Treasury Department, as the Senator will see by the report of the Committee on Claims on the bill, held:

That the section of the act of July 7, 1884, did not give the accounting officers of the Department any further authority to pass claims than was given to them by the act of June 14, 1878, and that inasmuch as Congress never made an appropriation for the payment of damages of the character included in this claim as part thereof, the claim did not, therefore, arise under any appropriation which has either been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund, and that therefore the accounting officers had no authority to pass upon the claim and report it to Congress.

Mr. PROCTOR. The case was this: The premises were used for several years. In the lease there was a stipulation that as changes were required to adapt the premises to the use of the Signal Office they should be restored, when the premises were given up, to their original condition. That was the only question of damages. It was the stipulation in the lease to restore the property to its original condition, and the cost of that was carefully ascertained. I supposed until this winter, when I saw the bill before the Committee on Claims, that the claim had been paid long ago.

I have nothing further to say about it, except that I know it to be a just and honest claim, and that the amount has been very carefully ascertained. It was stipulated in the lease that rent should be paid until these repairs were concluded, amounting to something over $600, I think. That sum was cut down one-half, and the estimated cost of restoring the buildings to their original condition was carefully appraised, and I think was appraised very low.

What I wanted to call attention to was that this is not an ordinary claim for damages, but results from a stipulation in the lease. As the house had to be altered to make it useful to the War Department, the lease provided that it should simply be restored to the original condition fitted for a private house.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, the facts are these: The Government owes this debt, and every Senator on the floor recognizes and acknowledges the fact. We have not paid that debt. We have been owing it since 1889, and these people are in need of their money. Is it not right and just that the Senate of the United States should pass this amendment and pay the debt? I sometimes pity the men and women who have to appear in the corridors of this Capitol day after day and year after year for the purpose of trying to collect their honest claims against the Government of the United States. Simply because we are a great big government and have power in our hands to refuse the payment of these claims, we refuse to pay them.

If this claim is not passed upon this appropriation bill, it will go over another year. I have ascertained to-day that the Senate bill providing for the payment of this claim will not pass the House of Representatives during this session, therefore it will go over until the next session; and then, perhaps, it will go over another year, and then another year, and by and by, in ten years, because it will then be an old claim, it will not be paid at all. That is the history of all of these claims.

I hope the point of order will not be made against the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have said before that it is as painful to me to make the point of order as it is to the Senator to have it made, but the Senators see how the Committee on Appropriations is situated. The Senator from Virginia offers a $19,000 claim; the Senator from Oregon offers another claim, which was passed by the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on Appropriations would be compelled to take up and consider private claims. The Committee on Appropriations is not adapted to that character of work; it is not our business, and we are not responsible because the Government does not comply with its contracts which are made outside and not adjusted by the officers of the Government.

I think a great mistake has been made by the claimant in this case or by his counsel in not having the claim properly acted upon by the officers of the Department and certified to Congress, so that it would have been taken out of the category of claims. It ought to have been done in that way; and had it been done in that way, it would have been passed without any question. But we can not let it come in as a claim, when the party says it is a claim and when he went before the Committee on Claims and had that committee consider and report in favor of it, pass it, and send it to us. I can not make the point of order against one Senator and not make it against another.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri makes the point of order that the amendment proposed is obnoxious to clause 4 of Rule XVI. In the judgment of the Chair the point of order is well taken.

Mr. KYLE. I have another amendment or two to offer before I am through. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri will consider this a new claim or an old claim or what sort of a claim he may regard it. On page 69, after line 19, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, after line 19, it is proposed to insert:

To pay Mr. J. E. Johnson for services as stenographer on special hearings before the Committee on Education and Labor, $37.50.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a matter which the Senator from South Dakota ought to know properly belongs to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and not to the Committee on Appropriations. Had the Senator introduced the amendment and referred it to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and had it been reported favorably, the Committee on Appropriations would have placed it on this bill.

Mr. KYLE. I will say that it has been referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but that committee held that they had no jurisdiction of the matter. In other words, the Committee on Education and Labor did not offer in the first place a resolution authorizing them to employ a stenographer for this special service, and, therefore, payment was not allowable under the rules of the committee. On going to the disbursing officer in the Secretary's office of the Senate, he said to me the only way in which the amount could be paid was by placing an amendment upon the deficiency bill, and therefore it is offered in this form.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the character of the service?

Mr. KYLE. It was special work done for the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. COCKRELL. By order of the committee?

Mr. KYLE. Yes; by order of the committee, and the committee recommend the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well, then, I make no question of order about the amendment. It is a matter for the Senate to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order being withdrawn, the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KYLE. I offer for the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], from the Committee on Indian Depredations, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 149, in line 22, after the word "judgments," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That any and all judgments included in said Executive document which the present Attorney-General has already examined, and any and all judgments rendered during his term of office and which he shall be willing to certify under the provisions of this act, may be certified notwithstanding the order of payment herein specified.

Mr. KYLE. I can explain the amendment in a word. The provision in the bill as it now stands is that Indian depredation claims shall be paid in the order of their examination, beginning with the first and running on down through the list, but there are some of the last ones which have already been examined by the present Attorney-General, and this provision will allow those to be paid without a reëxamination according to that order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in under the head of "Judgments in Indian depredation claims," which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 149, in line 17, after the words "United States," it is proposed to insert "or whether exorbitant sums have been allowed:" so as to read:

Provided, That no one of the said judgments shall be paid until the Attorney-General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has caused to be examined the evidence heretofore presented to the Court of Claims in support of said judgment and such other pertinent evidence as he shall be able to procure as to whether fraud, wrong, or injustice has been done to the United States, or whether exorbitant sums have been allowed, and finds upon such evidence no grounds sufficient in his opinion to support a new trial of said case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

That the unexpended balances of appropriations made in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 2, 1889, for pay of the Navy, under the head "Navy Department claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller," be, and the same are hereby, made available to pay amounts due to naval officers, or their legal representatives, before July 16, 1890, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of United States vs. Strong (125 United States Reports, 656), United States vs. Bishop (120 United States Reports, 51), and United States vs. Symonds (120 United States Reports, 46).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to have this amendment fully understood by the Senate before voting upon it. It is an amendment which will enable the surviving sailors and the widows and orphans of those who served in the Navy in the war of 1860 to 1865 and the years immediately subsequent to obtain the benefits of an unexpended appropriation, already made under the authority of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in several cases, deciding that the men who were performing sea duty upon vessels in port liable to be sent out immediately, and constantly required to be on board the ship, were in the sense and meaning of the law performing sea service and entitled to sea pay.

In 1893, after this appropriation had been made and the money had been largely expended, a provision was inserted in an appropriation bill, prior to the filing of the petition in the case decided by the Supreme Court, imposing a limitation of six years and prohibiting the payment of all antecedent claims coming within the purview of the provisions of that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which had been audited and certified and recommended to Congress for payment

That limitation excluded only—I will not say "only," because there were perhaps some other cases—but it excluded chiefly and largely (I have before me the list of certified cases from the present Secretary of the Treasury) the survivors and the widows and children of the men who served in the war. They are the men who are stricken down by this limitation, and all the others then were and now are being paid this money. These persons appeal to Congress that this injustice shall not be done to them, and they claim, and I think rightfully claim, that under the provisions of the amendment to the Constitution, which secures the validity of the public debt, including pensions and bounties, the provision excluding them from receiving the benefits of the debt declared by the supreme judicial tribunal to be due them, certified and allowed by the Treasury Department and recommended to Congress, is absolutely void, and has no proper place upon the statute books of the country.

It is a most extraordinary proposition that a limitation of this character should be applied affecting this class of people. That there may be no doubt about it, I refer here to the report made by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle, on the 19th of July, 1894, showing in 1860, in twenty-five or thirty cases, and running through to 1870, 1875, and 1876, the service rendered by these men and the amount of sea pay due to them. All the others having been paid, even men not in the war, and their widows and children to-day being paid, why this limitation against these persons? Why strike at the constitutional amendment; for the war debt, including pensions and bounties, is a part of the public debt, and if sea pay is not included in terms, the spirit and purpose and effect of the constitutional amendment does include it.

To go further, this is the only class of claims audited, allowed, and certified and decided by the Supreme Court to which this limitation is applied. Here is the document, referred to Congress and recommended by the Secretary, in which post-office claims, and all other claims dating back to 1840 and 1854, are allowed, audited, certified, and recommended; and yet alone to this class of cases, where all have been paid except the men who served in the sixties, the limitation is being applied.

In the last session of Congress the distinguished Senator from Missouri, now the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] allowed a similar amendment to be put upon the deficiency bill. I have it here on page 2409 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

Mr. VOORHEES. I offer an amendment to come in on page 79, in line 5, after the word "cents." I move to insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That the unexpended balances of appropriations made in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 2, 1889, for pay of the Navy, under the head 'Navy Department claims allowed by the Fourth Auditor and Second Comptroller,' be, and the same are hereby, made available to pay amounts due to naval officers, or their legal representatives, before July 16, 1880, in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases of United States vs. Strong (125 U. S. R., 656), United States vs. Bishop (120 U. S. R., 51), and United States vs. Symonds (120 U. S. R., 46)."

That is this amendment in words. I am urging the amendment at the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], now absent, who brought to me a note from the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and others and because of my own people, widows and orphans of officers of the Navy, who are interested in this just and righteous claim which has been allowed and recommended by the Department.

I read further from the RECORD:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill could possibly have been called to the last amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri invites the attention of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Maine is watching the bill very closely.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Missouri is entirely mistaken. The Senator from Maine had his attention called to this amendment, if not really now, some hours past. It is susceptible of the fullest possible explanation.

So the Senate at that time affirmed the correctness of this proposition and put the amendment upon the bill, thus repealing the limitation in the act of 1866 and acknowledging the invalidity of that act and the justice and rightfulness of the claim for compensation on the part of those who served in the Navy during the sixties.

I wish to say that this is a great outrage, which I think no terms can describe. It is not for me to be the special advocate or defender of that great and gallant class of men; yet I do it cheerfully, and I urge the rights of their widows and their children, who are their survivors. I insist that they should not be discriminated against, being protected by the Constitution and its guarantees as to the validity of the public debt.

All the others have been paid without litigation. This very report of the present Secretary of the Treasury, sending these claims to us, shows that in all the other Departments he certifies, audits, and recommends the payment of the claims running back to 1840 and 1854, and yet this one class of meritorious people are selected for what? To be stricken down, while all others receive the pay.

The amount is appropriated and is in the Treasury unexpended. It is suspended by this void and unrighteous limitation. The amendment being perfectly in order, I ask that it may be placed on the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the amendment ought to be adopted. In 1892 we provided:

That no part of this sum shall be used for the payment of any claim for sea pay on receiving, training, or practice ships, or for the payment of any claim which may have been allowed under the decisions of the Supreme Court which have been adopted by the accounting officers as a basis for the allowance of said claims which accrued prior to July 16, 1880.

That hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury shall not receive, examine, consider, or allow any claim against the United States for sea pay or commutation of rations which has been or may be presented by officers of the Navy, their heirs or legal representatives, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, which have heretofore been adopted as a basis for the allowance of such claims, which accrued prior to July 16, 1880.

That was a very decided declaration against these claims, although they were audited under the interpretation of the decision of the Supreme Court. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. CALL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
